ON

THE INDIAN SECT OF THE JAINAS

BY

JOHANN GEORG BUHLER C.I.E., LLD., PH.D.
Member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences, Vienna.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

EDITED with an OUTLINE of JAINA MYTHOLOGY

BY

Jas. Burgess, C.I.E., LLD., F.R.S.E.

LONDON:
LUZAC & CO.,
PUBLISHERS TO THE INDIA OFFICE
46, Great Russell Street
1903.
The late Dr. Georg Bühler's essay Ueber die Indische Secte der Jaina, read at the anniversary meeting of the Imperial Academy of Sciences of Vienna on the 26th May 1887, has been for some time out of print in the separate form. Its value as a succinct account of the Śrāvaka sect, by a scholar conversant with them and their religious literature is well known to European scholars; but to nearly all educated natives of India works published in German and other continental languages are practically sealed books, and thus the fresh information which they are well able to contribute is not elicited. It is hoped that the translation of this small work may meet with their acceptance and that of Europeans in India and elsewhere to whom the original is either unknown or who do not find a foreign language so easy to read as their own.

The translation has been prepared under my supervision, and with a few short footnotes. Professor Bühler's long note on the authenticity of the Jaina tradition I have transferred to an appendix (p. 48) incorporating with it a summary of what he subsequently expanded in proof of his thesis.

To Colebrooke's account of the Tirthaṅkaras revered by the Jainas, but little has been added since its publication in the ninth volume of the Asiatic Researches; and as these are the centre of their worship, always represented in their temples, and surrounded by attendant figures, — I have ventured to add a somewhat fuller account of them and a summary of the general mythology of the sect, which may be useful to the archaeologist and the student of their iconography.

Edinburgh, April 1903.

J. BURGESS.
THE INDIAN SECT OF THE JAINAS.

The Jain sect is a religious society of modern India, at variance to Brahmanism, and possesses undoubted claims on the interest of all friends of Indian history. This claim is based partly on the peculiarities of their doctrines and customs, which present several resemblances to those of Buddhism, but, above all, on the fact that it was founded in the same period as the latter.

Larger and smaller communities of Jainas or Arhatā,—that is followers of the prophet, who is generally called simply the Jīna—‘the conqueror of the world’,—or the Arhat—‘the holy one’,—are to be found in almost every important Indian town, particularly among the merchant class. In some provinces of the West and North-west, in Gujarāt, Rājputāna, and the Panjāb, as also in the Dravidian districts in the south,—especially in Kanara,—they are numerous; and, owing to the influence of their wealth, they take a prominent place. They do not, however, present a compact mass, but are divided into two rival branches—the Digambara and Śvetāmbara¹—each of which is split up into several subdivisions. The Digambara, that is, "those whose robe is the atmosphere," owe their name to the circumstance that they regard absolute nudity as the indispensable sign of holiness,—though the advance of civilization has compelled them to depart from the practice of their theory. The Svetambara, that is, "they who are clothed in white"—do not claim this doctrine, but hold it as possible that the holy ones, who clothe themselves, may also attain the highest goal. They allow, however, that the founder of the Jaina religion and his first disciples disdained to wear clothes. They are divided, not only by this quarrel, but also by differences about dogmas and by a different literature. The separation must baras to the north. This is by no means the case. The former in the Panjáb, in eastern Rājputāna and in the North West Provinces, are just as numerous, if not more so, than the latter, and also appear here and there in western Rājputāna and Gujarāt: see Indian Antiquary, vol. VII, p. 28.

¹ In notes on the Jainas, one often finds the view expressed, that the Digambaras belong only to the south, and the Śvetām-

2 The ascetics of lower rank, now called Paṇḍit, now-a-days wear the costume of the country. The Bhaṭṭāraka, the heads of the sect, usually wrap themselves in a large cloth (chadr). They lay it off during meals. A disciple then rings a bell as a sign that entrance is forbidden (Ind. Ant. loc. cit.). When the present custom first arose cannot be ascertained. From the description of the Chinese pilgrim Hiuen Tsiang (St. Julien, Vie. p. 224), who calls them Li-hi, it appears that they were still faithful to their principles in the beginning of the seventh century A.D. "The Li-hi (Nirgranthis) distinguish themselves by leaving their bodies naked and pulling out their hair. Their skin is all cracked, their feet are hard and chapped: like rotted trees that one sees near rivers."
therefore be of old standing. Tradition, too, upholds this—though the dates given do not coincide. From inscriptions it is certain that the split occurred before the first century of our era 3. Their opposing opinions are manifested in the fact that they do not allow each other the right of intermarriage or of eating at the same table,—the two chief marks of social equality. In spite of the age of the schism, and the enmity that divides the two branches, they are at one as regards the arrangement of their communities, doctrine, discipline, and cult,—at least in the more important points; and, thus, one can always speak of the Jaina religion as a whole.

The characteristic feature of this religion is its claim to universality, which it holds in common with Buddhism, and in opposition to Brahmanism. It also declares its object to be to lead all men to salvation, and to open its arms—not only to the noble Aryan, but also to the low-born Sudra and even to the alien, deeply despised in India, the Mlechcha 4. As their doctrine, like Buddha's,

---

3 See below p. 44.

4 In the stereotyped introductions to the sermons of Jina it is always pointed out that they are addressed to the Aryan and non-Aryan. Thus in the Aupapâtika Sûtra § 56. (Leumann) it runs as follows: teṣit šavvesiṁ āriyamanāriyānam agilāe dharmam āikkhai "to all these, Aryans and non-Aryans, he taught the law untiringly". In accordance with this principle, conversions of people of low caste, such as gardeners, dyers, etc., are not uncommon even at the present day. Muhammadans too, regarded as Mlechcha, are still received among the Jaina communities. Some is originally a philosophical ethical system intended for ascetics, the disciples, like the Buddhists, are, divided into ecclesiastics and laity. At the head stands an order of ascetics, originally Nirgrantha "they, who are freed from all bands," now usually called Yatis—"Ascetics", or Sadhus—"Holy", which, among the Śvetāmbara also admits women, cases of the kind were communicated to me in Aḥmadābād in the year 1876, as great triumphs of the Jainas. Tales of the conversion of the emperor Akbar, through the patriarch Hiravijaya (Ind Antiq. Vol. XI, p. 256), and of the spread of the Digambara sect in an island Jainabhadri, in the Indian Ocean (Ind. Ant. Vol. VII, p. 28) and in Arabia, shew that the Jainas are familiar with the idea of the conversion of non-Indians. Hiuen Tsiang's note on the appearance of the Nirgrantha or Digambara in Kiāpishi (Beal, Si-yu-ki, Vol. I, p. 55), points apparently to the fact that they had, in the North West at least, spread their missionary activity beyond the borders of India. Even the canonical works of the Śvetāmbara, as for example, the Āchārāṅga (Sacred Books of the East. Vol. XXII, p. 88—186) contain directions for nuns. It seems, however, that they have never played such an important part as in Buddhism. At the present time, the few female orders among the Śvetāmbara consist entirely of virgin widows, whose husbands have died in childhood, before the beginning of their life together. It is not necessary to look upon the admission of nuns among the Śvetāmbara as an imitation of Buddhist teaching, as women were received into some of the old Brahmanical orders; see my note to Manu, VIII, 363, (Sac. Bks. of the East, Vol. XXV, p. 317). Among the Digambaras, exclusion of women was demanded from causes not far to seek. They give as their reason for it, the doctrine that women are not capable of attaining Nirvāṇa; see Peterson, Second Report, in Jour. Bom. Br. R. As. Soc. Vol. XVII, p. 84.
and under them the general community of the Upâsaka "the Worshippers", or the Śrâvaka, "the hearers".

The ascetics alone are able to penetrate into the truths which Jina teaches, to follow his rules and to attain to the highest reward which he promises. The laity, however, who do not dedicate themselves to the search after truth, and cannot renounce the life of the world, still find a refuge in Jainism. It is allowed to them as hearers to share its principles, and to undertake duties, which are a faint copy of the demands made on the ascetics. Their reward is naturally less. He who remains in the world cannot reach the highest goal, but he can still tread the way which leads to it. Like all religions of the Hindûs founded on philosophical speculation, Jainism sees this highest goal in Nirvâna or Moksha, the setting free of the individual from the Samsâra,—the revolution of birth and death. The means of reaching it are to it, as to Buddhism, the three Jewels—the right Faith, the right Knowledge, and the right Walk. By the right Faith it understands the full surrender of himself to the teacher, the Jina, the firm conviction that he alone has found the way of salvation, and only with him is protection and refuge to be found. Ask who Jina is, and the Jaina will give exactly the same answer as the Buddhist with respect to Buddho. He is originally an erring man, bound with the bonds of the world, who,—not by the help of a teacher, nor by the revelation of the Vedas—which, he declares, are corrupt—but by his own power, has attained to omniscience and freedom, and out of pity for suffering mankind preaches and declares the way of salvation, which he has found. Because he has conquered the world and the enemies in the human heart, he is called Jina “the Victor”, Mahāvīra, “the great hero”; because he possesses the highest knowledge, he is called Sarvajña or Kevalin, the “omniscient”, Buddha, the “enlightened”; because he has freed himself from the world he receives the names of Mukta “the delivered one”, Siddha and Tathāgata, “the perfected”, Arhat “the holy one”; and as the proclaimer of the doctrine, he is the Tīrthakara “the finder of the ford”, through the ocean of the Samsara. In these epithets, applied to the founder of their doctrine, the Jainas agree almost entirely with the Buddhists, as the likeness of his character to that of Buddha would lead us to expect. They prefer, however, to use the names Jīna and Arhat, while the Buddhists prefer to speak of Buddha as Tathāgata or Sugata. The title Tīrthakara is peculiar to the Jainas. Among the Buddhists it is a designation for false teachers 6.

6 The titles Siddha, Buddha and Mukta are certainly borrowed by both sects from the terminology of the Brāhmaṇs, which they used, even in olden times, to describe those saved during their lifetime (jīvanmukta). The surnames Vīra or Mahāvīra and Arhat are probably derived from the same source. For Vīra is
The Jaina says further, however, that there was more than one Jīna. Four and twenty have, at long intervals, appeared and have again and again restored to their original purity the doctrines darkened by evil influences. They all spring from noble, warlike tribes. Only in such, not among the low Brāhmaṇs, can a Jīna see the light of the world.

The first Jīna Rishabhā—more than 100 billion oceans of years ago,—periods of unimaginable length,—was born as the son of a king of Ayodhyā and lived eight million four hundred thousand years. The intervals between his successors and the durations of their lives became shorter and shorter. Between the twenty third, Pārśva and the twenty fourth Vardhamāna, were only 250 years, and the age of the latter is given as used in the Śaivite doctrine to describe a consecrated one who is on the way to redemption. An Arhat, among the Brāhmaṇs, is a man distinguished for his knowledge and pious life (comp. for example Āpastamba, Dharmasūtra. I, 13, 13; II, 10, 1.) and this idea is so near that of the Buddhists and the Jainas that it may well be looked upon as the foundation of the latter. The meaning of Tīrthakara “prophet, founder of religion”, is derived from the Brahmanic use of tīrtha in the sense of “doctrine”. Comp. also H. Jacobi’s Article on the Title of Buddha and Jīna, Sac. Books of the East. Vol. XXII, pp. xix, xx.

7 A Sāgara or Sāgaropamā of years is = 100,000,000,000,000 Palya or Palyopama. A Palya, is a period in which a well, of one or, according to some, a hundred yojana, i. e. of one or a hundred geographical square miles, stuffed full of fine hairs, can be emptied, if one hair is pulled out every hundred years: Wilson, Select Works, Vol. I, p. 309; Colebrooke, Essays, Vol. II, p. 194. ed. Cowell.
only seventy-two years. He appeared, according to some, in the last half of the sixth century, according to others in the first half of the fifth century B.C. He is of course the true, historical prophet of the Jainas and it is in his doctrine, that the Jainas should believe. The dating back of the origin of the Jaina religion again, agrees with the pretensions of the Buddhists, who recognise twenty-five Buddhas who taught the same system one after the other. Even with Brahmanism, it seems to be in some distant manner connected, for the latter teaches in its cosmogony, the successive appearance of Demiurges, and wise men—the fourteen Manus, who, at various periods helped to complete the work of creation and proclaimed the Brahmanical law. These Brahmanical ideas may possibly have given rise to the doctrines of the twenty-five Buddhas and twenty-four Jinas,8 which, certainly, are later additions in both systems.

The undoubted and absolutely correct comprehension of the nine truths which the Jina gives expression to, or of the philosophical system which the Jina taught, represents the second Jewel—the true Knowledge. Its principal features are shortly as follows9.

8 For the list of these Jinas, see below, pp. 66—71.

The world (by which we are to understand, not only the visible, but also imaginary continents depicted with the most extravagant fancy, heavens and hells of the Brahmanical Cosmology, extended by new discoveries) is uncreated. It exists, without ruler, only by the power of its elements, and is everlasting. The elements of the world are six substances—souls, Dharma or moral merit, Adharma or sin, space, time, particles of matter. From the union of the latter spring four elements—earth, fire, water, wind—and further, bodies and all other appearances of the world of sense and of the supernatural worlds. The forms of the appearances are mostly unchangeable. Only the bodies of men and their age increase or decrease in consequence of the greater or less influence of sin or merit, during immeasurably long periods,—the Avasarpinī and the Utsarpinī. Souls are, each by itself, independent, real existences whose foundation is pure intelligence, and who possess an impulse to action. In the world they are always chained to bodies. The reason of this confinement is that they give themselves up to the stress of activity, to passions, to influences of the senses and objects of the mind, or attach themselves to a false belief. The deeds which they perform in the bodies are Karman, merit and sin. This drives them—when one body has passed away, according to the conditions of its existence—into another, whose quality depends on the character of the Karman, and will be determined especially by the last thoughts springing from it before death. Virtue leads to the heavens of the gods or to birth among men in pure and noble races. Sin consigns the souls to the lower regions, in the bodies of animals, in plants, even into masses of lifeless matter. For—according to the Jaina doctrine—souls exist not only in organic structures, but also in apparently dead masses, in stones, in lumps of earth, in drops of water, in fire and in wind. Through union with bodies the nature of the soul is affected. In the mass of matter the light of its intelligence is completely concealed; it loses consciousness, is immovable, and large or small, according to the dimensions of its abode. In organic structures it is always conscious; it depends however, on the nature of the same, whether it is movable or immovable and possessed of five, four, three, two, or one organ of sense.

The bondage of souls, if they inhabit a human body, can be abolished by the suppression of the causes which lead to their confinement and by the destruction of the Karman. The suppression of the causes is accomplished by overcoming the inclination to be active and the passions, by the control of the senses, and by steadfastly holding to the right faith. In this way will be hindered the addition of new Karman, new merit or new guilt. The destruction of Karman remaining from previous existences can be brought about either spontaneously by the exhaustion of the supply or by asceticism. In the latter case the final state is the attainment to a knowledge which penetrates the universe, to Kevala, Jñāna and Nirvāṇa or Moksha: full deliverance from all bonds. These goals may be reached even while the soul is still in its body. If however the body is destroyed then the soul wanders into the "No-World" (alōka) as the Jain says, i. e. into the heaven of Jina ‘the delivered’, lying outside the world. There it continues eternally in its pure intellectual nature. Its condition is that of perfect rest which nothing disturbs. These fundamental ideas are carried out in the particulars with a subtilness and fantasy unexampled, even in subtile and fantastic India, in a scholarly style, and defended by the syādvāda—the doctrine of "It may be so", —a mode of reasoning which makes it possible to assert and deny the existence of one and the same thing. If this be compared with the other Indian systems, it stands nearer the Brāhmaṇ than the Buddhist, with which it has the acceptance in common of only four, not five elements. Jainism touches all the Brāhmaṇ religions and Buddhism in its 10 On the Jaina Paradise see below p. 74. Dr. Bühler seems here to have confounded the Alōka or Non-world, ‘the space where only things without life are found’, with the heaven of the Siddhas; but these are living beings who have crossed the boundary of the Sāṃśāra and attained perfection. Their dwelling place is above that of the highest of the Anuttara gods. — Ed.

1 Weber, Ueber das Śatruṇjaya Māhātmyam, S. 15; or Indian Antiquary vol. XXX, p. 240, n. 4. — Ed.
cosmology and ideas of periods, and it agrees entirely with regard to the doctrines of Karman, of the bondage, and the deliverance of souls. Atheism, the view that the world was not created, is common to it with Buddhism and the Sàñkhya philosophy. Its psychology approaches that of the latter in that both believe in the existence of innumerable independent souls. But the doctrine of the activity of souls and their distribution into masses of matter is in accordance with the Vedânta, according to which the principle of the soul penetrates every thing existing. In the further development of the soul doctrine, the conceptions 'individual soul' and 'living being' to which the Jaina and the Bràhmaṇ give the same name,—jīva, seem to become confounded. The Jaina idea of space and time as real substances is also found in the Vaiśeshika system. In placing Dharma and Adharma among substances Jainism stands alone.

The third jewel, the right walk which the Jaina ethics contains, has its kernel in the five great oaths which the Jaina ascetic takes on his entrance into the order. He promises, just as the Bràhmaṇ penitent, and almost in the same words, not to hurt, not to speak untruth, to appropriate nothing to himself without permission, to preserve chastity, and to practice self-sacrifice. The contents of these simple rules become most extraordinarily extended on the part of the Jainas by the insertion of five clauses, in each of which are three separate active instruments of sin, in special relation to thoughts, words, and deeds. Thus, concerning the oath not to hurt, on which the Jaina lays the greatest emphasis: it includes not only the intentional killing or hurting of living beings, plants, or the souls existing in dead matter, it requires also the utmost carefulness in the whole manner of life, in all movements, a watchfulness over all functions of the body by which anything living might be hurt. It demands finally strict watch over the heart and tongue, and the avoidance of all thoughts and words which might lead to dispute and quarrel and thereby to harm. In like manner the rule of sacrifice means not only that the ascetic has no house or possessions, it teaches also that a complete unconcern toward agreeable and disagreeable impressions is necessary, as also the sacrifice of every attachment to anything living or dead.

Beside the conscientious observance of these rules, Tapas—Asceticism, is most important for the right walk of those, who strive to attain Nirvana. Asceticism is inward as well as outward. The former is concerned with self-discipline, the cleansing and purifying of the mind. It embraces repentance of sin, confession of the same to the teacher, and penance done for it, humility before teachers and all virtuous ones, and the service of the same, the study and teaching of the faith or holy writing, pious meditations on the misery of the world, the impurity of the body, etc. and lastly, the stripping off of every thing pertaining to the world. On the other hand, under the head of exterior Asceticism, the Jaina understands, temperance, begging, giving up all savoury food, different kinds of self-mortification such as sitting in unnatural and wearying positions, hindering the action of the organs, especially by fasts, which, under certain circumstances may be continued to starvation. Voluntary death by the withdrawal of nourishment is, according to the strict doctrine of the Digambara, necessary for all ascetics, who have reached the highest step of knowledge. The Kevalin, they say, eats no longer. The milder Śvetāmbara do not demand this absolutely, but regard it, as a sure entrance to Nirvāṇa. In order, however, that this death may bear its fruits, the ascetic must keep closely to the directions for it, otherwise he merely lengthens the number of rebirths 4.

2 The Digambara sect, at least in southern India, do not seem to be all quite so punctiliously careful in this as the Śvetāmbara of western India.—Ed.

4 With reference to asceticism, comp. Leumann, Aupapātika Sūtra § 30. The death of the wise ones by starvation is described; Weber, Bhagavatī Sūtra, II, 266—267; Hoernle Upāsakadāsa Sūtra, pp. 44—62; Āchārāṅga Sūtra, in S. B. E. Vol. XXII,
From these general rules follow numerous special ones, regarding the life of the disciple of Jina. The duty of sacrifice forces him, on entrance into the order, to give up his possessions and wander homeless in strange lands, alms-vessel in hand, and, if no other duty interferes, never to stay longer than one night in the same place. The rule of wounding nothing means that he must carry three articles with him, a straining cloth, for his drinking water, a broom, and a veil before his mouth, in order to avoid killing insects. It also commands him to avoid all cleansing and washing, and to rest in the four months of the rainy season, in which animal and plant life displays itself most abundantly. In order to practice asceticism, it is the rule to make this time of rest a period of strictest fasts, most diligent study of the holy writings, and deepest meditation. This duty also necessitates the ascetic to pluck out in the most painful manner his hair which, according to oriental custom, he must do away with at his consecration—a peculiar custom of the Jainas, which is not found among other penitents of India.

Like the five great vows, most of the special directions for the discipline of the Jain ascetic are copies, and often exaggerated copies, of the pp. 70—73. Among the Digambara the heads of schools still, as a rule, fall victims to this fate. Even among the Śvetāmbara, cases of this kind occur, see K. Forbes, Rās Mālā, Vol. II, pp. 331—332, or 2nd ed. pp. 610—611.
Brāhmanic rules for penitents. The outward marks of the order closely resemble those of the Sannyāsin. The life of wandering during eight months and the rest during the rainy season agree exactly; and in many other points, for example in the use of confession, they agree with the Buddhists. They agree with Brāhmans alone in ascetic self-torture, which Buddhism rejects; and specially characteristic is the fact that ancient Brāhmanism recommends starvation to its penitents as beneficial.

The doctrine of the right way for the Jaina laity differs from that for the ascetics. In place of the five great vows appear mere echoes. He vows to avoid only serious injury to living beings, i.e. men and animals; only the grosser forms of untruth —direct lies; only the most flagrant forms of taking, what is not given, that is, theft and robbery. In place of the oath of chastity there is that of conjugal fidelity. In place of that of self-denial, the promise is not greedily to accumulate possessions and to be contented. To these copies are added seven other vows, the miscellaneous contents of which correspond to the special directions for the discipline of ascetics. Their object is, partly to bring the outward life of the laity into accordance with the Jaina teaching, especially with regard to the protection of living creatures from harm, and partly to point the heart to the highest goal. Some contain prohibitions against certain drinks, such as spirits; or meats, such as flesh, fresh butter, honey, which cannot be enjoyed without breaking the vow of preservation of animal life. Others limit the choice of businesses which the laity may enter; for example, agriculture is forbidden, as it involves the tearing up of the ground and the death of many animals, as Brâhmanism also holds. Others have to do with mercy and charitableness, with the preserving of inward peace, or with the necessity of neither clinging too much to life and its joys nor longing for death as the end of suffering. To the laity, however, voluntary starvation is also recommended as meritorious. These directions (as might be expected from the likeness of the circumstances) resemble in many points the Buddhist directions for the laity, and indeed are often identical with regard to the language used. Much is however specially in accordance with Brâhmanic doctrines. In prac-

An example may be found in Jacobi's careful comparison of the customs of the Brāhmanic and Jaina ascetics, in the beginning of his translation of the Āchārāṅga Sūtra, S. B. E. Vol. XXII, pp. xxii—xxix. In relation to the death by starvation of Brahmanical hermits and Sannyāsin, see Āpastamba, Dharmasūtra, in S. B. E. Vol. II, pp. 154, 156, where (II, 22, 4 and II, 23, 2) it, says of the penitents who have reached the highest grade of asceticism: "Next he shall live on water (then) on air, then on ether".

6 The Upâsakadesâ Sūtra treats of the right life of the laity, Hoernle, pp. 11—37 (Bibl. Ind.), and Hemachandra, Yogasūtra, Prakāsa ii and iii; Windisch, Zeitschrift der Deutsch Morg. Ges. Bd. XXVIII, pp. 226—246. Both scholars have pointed out in the notes to their translations, the relationship between the precepts and terms of the Jainas and Buddhists. The Jainas have borrowed tical life Jainism makes of its laity earnest men who exhibit a stronger trait of resignation than other Indians and excel in an exceptional willingness to sacrifice anything for their religion. It makes them also fanatics for the protection of animal life. Wherever they gain influence, there is an end of bloody sacrifices and of slaughtering and killing the larger animals.

The union of the laity with the order of ascetics has, naturally, exercised a powerful reaction on the former and its development, as well as on its teaching, and is followed by similar results in Jainism and Buddhism. Then, as regards the changes in the teaching, it is no doubt to be ascribed to the influence of the laity that the atheistic Jaina system, as well as the Buddhist, has been endowed with a cult. The ascetic, in his striving for Nirvâna, endeavors to suppress the natural desire of man to worship higher powers. In the worldly hearer, who does not strive after this goal exclusively, this could not succeed. Since the doctrine gave no other support, the religious feeling of the laity clung to the founder of it: Jina, and with him his mythical predecessors, became gods. Monuments and temples a large number of rules directly from the law books of the Brâhmaṇs. The occupations forbidden to the Jaina laity are almost all those forbidden by the Brâhmaṇic law to the Brâhmaṇ, who in time of need lives like a Vaiśya. Hemachandra, Yogaśāstra. III, 98—112 and Upāsakadasā Sūtra, pp. 29—30, may be compared with Manu, X, 83—89, XI, 64 and 65, and the parallel passages quoted in the synopsis to my translation (S. B. E. Vol. XXV).
ornamented with their statues were built, especially at those places, where the prophets, according to legends, had reached their goal. To this is added a kind of worship, consisting of offerings of flowers and incense to Jina, of adoration by songs of praise in celebration of their entrance into Nirvâna, of which the Jaina makes a great festival by solemn processions and pilgrimages to the places where it has been attained. This influence of the laity has become, in course of time, of great importance to Indian art, and India is indebted to it for a number of its most beautiful architectural monuments, such as the splendid temples of Âbu, Girnâr and Šatruñjaya in Gujarât. It has also brought about a change in the mind of the ascetics. In many of their hymns in honour of Jina, they appeal to him with as much fervour as the Brâhman to his gods; and there are often expressions in them, contrary, to the original teaching, ascribing to Jina a creative power. Indeed a Jaina description of the six principal systems goes so far as to number Jainism—as also Buddhism—among the theistic religions.

7 For the Jaina ritual, see Indian Antiquary. Vol. XIII, pp. 191—196. The principal sacred places or Tîrthas are—Sameta Śikhara in Western Bengal, where twenty of the Jinas are said to have attained Nirvâna; Šatruñjaya and Girnâr in Kâthiâwâd sacred respectively to Rishabhanâtha and Neminâtha; Chandrapuri where Vâsupûjya died; and Pâvâ in Bengal at which Vardhamâna died.—Ed.

8 The latter assertion is to be found in the Shaddarśanasamasuchchaya Vers. 45, 77—78. A creative activity is attributed to
But in other respects also the admission of the laity has produced decisive changes in the life of the clergy. In the education of worldly communities, the ascetic—whose rules of indifference toward all and every thing, make him a being concentrated entirely upon himself and his goal—is united again to humanity and its interests. The duty of educating the layman and watching over his life, must of necessity change the wandering penitents into settled monks—who dedicate themselves to the care of souls, missionary activity, and the acquisition knowledge, and who only now and again fulfil the duty of changing their place of residence. The needs of the lay communities required the continual presence of teachers. Even should these desire to change from time to time, it was yet necessary to provide a shelter for them. Thus the Upâśraya or places of refuge, the Jaina monasteries came into existence, which exactly correspond to the Buddhist Sanghârâma. With the monasteries and the fixed residence in them appeared a fixed membership of the order, which, on account of the Jaina principle of unconditional obedience toward the teacher, proved to be much the Jinas even in the Kuhâon inscription which is dated 460-461 A. D. (Ind. Antiq. Vol. X, p. 126). There they are called âdikartri the 'original creators'. The cause of the development of a worship among the Jainas was first rightly recognised by Jacobi, S. B. E. Vol. XXII, p. xxi. The Jaina worship differs in one important point from that of the Buddhists. It recognised no worship of relics.

stricter than in Buddhism. On the development of the order and the leisure of monastic life, there followed further, the commencement of a literary and scientific activity. The oldest attempt, in this respect, limited itself to bringing their doctrine into fixed forms. Their results were, besides other lost works, the so-called Aṅga,—the members of the body of the law, which was perhaps originally produced in the third century B.C. Of the Aṅga eleven are no doubt preserved among the Śvetāṃbaras from a late edition of the fifth or sixth century A.D. These works are not written in Sanskrit, but in a popular Prākrit dialect: for the Jina, like Buddha, used the language of the people when teaching. They contain partly legends about the prophet and his activity as a teacher, partly fragments of a doctrine or attempts at systematic representations of the same. Though the dialect is different they present, in the form of the tales and in the manner of expression, a wonderful resemblance to the sacred writings of the Buddhists. The Digambaras, on the other hand, have preserved nothing of the Aṅga 9 A complete review of the Aṅga and the canonical works which were joined to it later, is to be found in A. Weber's fundamental treatise on the sacred writings of the Jainas in the Indische Studien, Bd. XVI, SS. 211—479 and Bd. XVIII, SS. 1—90. The Āchārāṅga and the Kalpa-sūtra are translated by H. Jacobi in the S. B. E. Vol. XXII, and a part of the Upāsakadaśa Sūtra by R. Hoernle in the Bibl. Ind. In the estimates of the age of the Aṅga I follow H. Jacobi, who has thoroughly discussed the question. S. B. E. Vol. XXII, pp. xxxix—xlvii.

but the names. They put in their place later systematic works, also in Prâkrit, and assert, in vindication of their different teaching, that the canon of their rivals is corrupted. In the further course of history, however, both branches of the Jainas have, like the Buddhists, in their continual battles with the Brâhmaṇas, found it necessary to make themselves acquainted with the ancient language of the culture of the latter. First the Digambara and later the Śvetâmbara began to use Sanskrit. They did not rest content with explaining their own teaching in Sanskrit works: they turned also to the secular sciences of the Brâhmaṇas. They have accomplished so much of importance, in grammar, in astronomy, as well as in some branches of letters, that they have won respect even from their enemies, and some of their works are still of importance to European science. In southern India, where they worked among the Dravidian tribes, they also advanced the development of these languages. The Kanarese literary language and the Tamil and Telugu rest on the foundations laid by the Jaina monks. This activity led them, indeed, far from their proper goal, but it created for them an important position in the history of literature and culture.

The resemblance between the Jainas and the Buddhists, which I have had so often cause to bring forward, suggests the question, whether they are to be regarded as a branch of the latter, or whether they resemble the Buddhists merely because, as their tradition asserts\(^\text{10}\), they sprang from the same period and the same religious movement in opposition to Brâhmanism. This question, was formerly, and is still sometimes, answered in agreement with the first theory, pointing out the undoubted defects in it, to justify the rejection of the Jaina tradition, and even declaring it to be a late and intentional fabrication. In spite of this the second explanation is the right one, because the Buddhists themselves confirm the statements of the Jainas about their prophet. Old historical traditions and inscriptions prove the independent existence of the sect of the Jainas even during the first five centuries after Buddha’s death, and among the inscriptions are some which clear the Jaina tradition not only from the suspicion of fraud but bear powerful witness to its honesty\(^\text{1}\).

\(^\text{10}\) The later tradition of the Jainas gives for the death of their prophet the dates 545, 527 and 467 B. C. (see Jacobi, Kalpasūtra, introd. pp. vii—ix and xxx). None of the sources in which these announcements appear are older than the twelfth century A. D. The latest is found in Hemachandra who died in the year 1172 A.D. The last is certainly false if the assertion, accepted by most authorities, that Buddha’s death falls between the years 482 and 472 B. C. is correct. For the Buddhist tradition maintains that the last Jaina Tirthakara died during Buddha’s lifetime (see p. 34).

\(^\text{1}\) Apart from the ill-supported supposition of Colebrooke, Stevenson and Thomas, according to which Buddha was a disloyal disciple of the founder of the Jainas, there is the view held by H. H. Wilson, A. Weber, and Lassen, and generally accepted till twenty-five years ago, that the Jainas are an old sect of the Buddhists. This was based, on the one hand, upon the resemblance of the Jaina
The oldest canonical books of the Jaina, apart from some mythological additions and evident doctrines, writings, and traditions to those of the Buddhists, on the other, on the fact that the canonical works of the Jaina shew a more modern dialect than those of the Buddhists, and that authentic historical proofs of their early existence are wanting. I was myself formerly persuaded of the correctness of this view and even thought I recognised the Jainas in the Buddhist school of the Sammatiya. On a more particular examination of Jaina literature, to which I was forced on account of the collection undertaken for the English Government in the seventies, I found that the Jainas had changed their name and were always, in more ancient times, called Nirgranthah or Nigantha. The observation that the Buddhists recognise the Nigantha and relate of their head and founder, that he was a rival of Buddha's and died at Pavâ where the last Tirthakara is said to have attained Nirvana, caused me to accept the view that the Jainas and the Buddhists sprang from the same religious movement. My supposition was confirmed by Jacobi, who reached the like view by another course, independently of mine (see Zeitschrift der Deutsch Morg. Ges. Bd. XXXV, S. 669. Note 1), pointing out that the last Tirthakara in the Jaina canon bears the same name as among the Buddhists. Since the publication of our results in the Ind. Ant. Vol. VII, p. 143 and in Jacobi's introduction to his edition of the Kalpasutra, which have been further verified by Jacobi with great penetration, views on this question have been divided. Oldenberg, Kern, Hoernle, and others have accepted this new view without hesitation, while A Weber (Indische Studien Bd. XVI, S. 240) and Barth (Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, tom. III, p. 90) keep to their former standpoint. The latter do not trust the Jaina tradition and believe it probable that the statements in the same are falsified. There are certainly great difficulties in the way of accepting such a position especially the improbability that the Buddhists should have forgotten the fact of the defection of their hated enemy. Meanwhile this is not absolutely impossible as the oldest preserved Jaina canon had its first authentic exaggerations, contain the following important notes on the life of their last prophet.\footnote{2} Vardhamâna was the younger son of Siddhârtha a nobleman who belonged to the Kshatriya race, called in Sanskrit Jñâtí or Jñâta, in Prakrit Nâya, and, according to the old custom of the Indian warrior caste, bore the name of a Brâhmanic family the Kâsyapa. His mother, who was called Triśalâ, belonged to the family of the governors of Videha. Siddhârtha’s residence was Kuṇḍapura, the Basukund of to-day, a suburb of the wealthy town of Vaiśālî, the modern Besarh, in Videha or Tirhut.\footnote{3} Siddhârtha was son-in-law to the king of Vaiśālî. Thirty years, it seems, Vardhamâna led a worldly life in his parents’ house. He married, and his wife Yāsodâ bore him a daughter Añojjâ, who was married to a noble of the name of Jamâli, and in her turn had a daughter. In his thirty-first edition only in the fifth or sixth century of our era, and as yet the proof is wanting that the Jainas, in ancient times, possessed a fixed tradition. The belief that I am able to insert this missing link in the chain of argument and the hope of removing the doubts of my two honoured friends has caused me to attempt a connected statement of the whole question although this necessitates the repetition of much that has already been said, and is in the first part almost entirely a recapitulation of the results of Jacobi’s researches.

\footnote{2} The statement that Vardhamâna’s father was a mighty king belongs to the manifest exaggerations. This assertion is refuted by other statements of the Jainas themselves. See Jacobi, S. B. E. Vol. XXII, pp. xi—xii.

\footnote{3} Dr. Bühler by a slip had here “Magadha oder Bihār”. — J. B. year his parents died. As they were followers of Pârśva the twenty-third Jina, they chose, according to the custom of the Jainas, the death of the wise by starvation. Immediately after this Vârdhamâna determined to renounce the world. He got permission to take this step from his elder brother Nandivardhana, and the ruler of his land divided his possessions and became a homeless ascetic. He wandered more than twelve years, only resting during the rainy season, in the lands of the Lâdhâ, in Vajjabhûmi and Subbhabhûmi, the Rârh of to-day in Bengal, and learned to bear with equanimity great hardships and cruel ill treatment at the hands of the inhabitants of those districts. Besides these he imposed upon himself the severest mortifications; after the first year he discarded clothes and devoted himself to the deepest meditation. In the thirteenth year of this wandering life he believed he had attained to the highest knowledge and to the dignity of a holy one. He then appeared as a prophet, taught the Nirgrantha doctrine, a modification of the religion of Pârśva, and organised the order of the Nirgrantha ascetics. From that time he bore the name of the venerable ascetic Mahâvîra. His career as a teacher lasted not quite thirty years, during which he travelled about, as formerly, all over the country, except during the rainy seasons. He won for himself numerous followers, both of the clergy and the lay class, among whom, however, in the fourteenth year of his period of teaching, a split arose—caused by his son-in-law Jamâli.

The extent of his sphere of influence almost corresponds with that of the kingdoms of Srâvastî or Kosala, Videha, Magadha, and Aṅga,—the modern Oudh, and the provinces of Tîrhubhat and Bihâr in Western Bengal. Very frequently he spent the rainy season in his native place Vaiśâlî and in Râjagṛih. Among his contemporaries were, a rival teacher Gosâla the son of Mâmkâlī—whom he defeated in a dispute, the King of Videha—Bhambhasâra or Bibbhisâra called Śrenîka, and his sons Abhayakumâra and the parricide Ajâtaśatru or Kûnîka, who protected him or accepted his doctrine, and also the nobles of the Lichchhavi and Mallaki races. The town of Pâpâ or Pâvâ, the modern Padraona ⁴ is given as the place of his death, where he dwelt during the rainy season of the last year of his life, in the house of the scribe of king Hastipâla. Immediately after his death, a second split took place in his community ⁵.

⁴ This is General Cunningham’s identification and a probable one. — Ed.
⁵ Notes on Mahâvîra’s life are to be found especially in Āchârâṅga Sûtra, in S. B. E. Vol. XXII, pp. 84—87, 189—202; Kalpasûtra, ibid. pp. 217—270. The above may be compared with Jacobî’s representation, ibid. pp. x—xviii, where most of the identifications of the places named are given, and Kalpasûtra introd. p. ii. We have to thank Dr. Hoernle for the important information that Vardhamâna’s birthplace Kuṇḍapura is still called Vasu-
On consideration of this information, it immediately strikes one, that the scene of Vardhamāna’s activity is laid in the same part of India as Buddha laboured in, and that several of the personalities which play a part in the history of Buddha also appear in the Jaina legend. It is through the kingdoms of Kosala, Videha and Magadha, that Buddha is said to have wandered preaching, and their capitals Śrāvastī and Rājagṛīha are just the places named, where he founded the largest communities. It is also told of the inhabitants of Vaiśāli that many turned to his doctrine. Many legends are told of his intercourse and friendship with Bimbisāra or Śrenika, king of Videha, also of the murder of the latter by his son Ajātaśātu, who, tortured with remorse, afterwards approached Buddha; mention is also made of his brother Abhayakumāra, likewise Makkhali Gosāla is mentioned among Buddha’s opponents and rivals. It is thus clear that the oldest Jaina legend makes Vardhamāna a fellow countryman and contemporary of Buddha, and search might be suggested in the writings of the Buddhists for confirmation of these assumptions. Such indeed are to be found in no small number.

Even the oldest works of the Singalese Canon,—which date apparently from the beginning of the second century after Buddha’s death, or the fourth century B.C., and which at any rate had their final edition in the third,—frequently mention an opposing sect of ascetics, the Nigaṇṭha, which the northern texts, written in Sanskrit, recognise among the opponents of Buddha, under the name Nirgrantha, whom an old Sūtra\(^6\) describes as "heads of companies of disciples and students, teachers of students, well known, renowned, founders of schools of doctrine, esteemed as good men by the multitude". Their leader is also named; he is called in Pāli Nātaputta, in Sanskrit Jñātiputra, that is the son of Jñāti or Nāta. The similarity between these words and the names of the family Jñāti, Jñāta or Naya, to which Vardhamāna belonged is apparent. Now since in older Buddhist literature, the title ‘the son of the man of the family N. N.’ is very often used instead of the individual’s name, as for example, ‘the son of the Sākiya’ is put for Buddha-Sākiyaputta, so that it is difficult not to suppose that Nātaputta or Jñātiputra, the leader of the Nigaṇṭha or Nirgrantha sect, is the same person as Vardhamāna, the descendant of the Jñāti family and founder of the Nirgrantha or Jaina sect. If we follow up this idea, and gather together the different remarks of the Buddhists about the opponents of Buddha, then it is apparent that his identity with Vardhamāna is certain. A number of rules of doctrine are ascribed to him, which are also found among the Jainas, and some events in his life, which we have already found in the accounts of the life of Vardhamâna, are related.

In one place in the oldest part of the Singalese canon, the assertion is put into the mouth of Nigañṭha Nâtaputta, that the Kiriyâvâda—the doctrine of activity, separates his system from Buddha’s teaching. We shall certainly recognise in this doctrine, the rule of the Kiriyâ, the activity of souls, upon which Jainism places so great importance. Two other rules from the doctrine of souls are quoted in a later work, not canonical: there it is stated, in a collection of false doctrines which Buddha’s rivals taught, that Nigañṭha asserts that cold water was living. Little drops of water contained small souls, large drops, large souls. Therefore he forbade his followers, the use of cold water. It is not difficult, in these curious rules to recognise the Jaina dogma, which asserts the existence of souls, even in the mass of lifeless elements of earth, water, fire, and wind. This also proves, that the Nigañṭha admitted the classification of souls, so often ridiculed by the Brâhmanas, which distinguishes between great and small. This work, like others, ascribes to Nigañṭha the assertion, that the so-called three danda—the three instruments by which man can cause injury to creatures—thought, word, and body, are separate active causes of sin. The Jaina doctrine agrees also in this case, which always specially represents the three and prescribes for each a special control.

Besides these rules, which perfectly agree with one another, there are still two doctrines of the Nigantha to be referred to which seem to, or really do, contradict the Jainas; namely, it is stated that Nātaputta demanded from his disciples the taking of four, not as in Vardhamâna's case, of five great vows. Although this difficulty may seem very important at first glance, it is, however, set aside by an oft repeated assertion in the Jaina works. They repeatedly say that Pârśva, the twenty-third Jina only recognised four vows, and Vardhamâna added the fifth. The Buddhists have therefore handed down a dogma which Jainism recognises. The question is merely whether they or the Jainas are the more to be trusted. If the latter, and it is accepted that Vardhamâna was merely the reformer of an old religion, then the Buddhists must be taxed with an easily possible confusion between the earlier and later teachers. If, on the other hand, the Jaina accounts of their twenty-third prophet are regarded as mythical, and Vardhamâna is looked upon as the true founder of the sect, — then the doctrine of the four vows must be ascribed to the latter, and we must accept as a fact that he had changed his views on this point. In any case, however, the Buddhist statement speaks for, rather than against, the identity of Nigaṇṭha with Jina. Vardhamāna's system, on the other hand, is quite irreconcilable with Nātaputta's assertion that virtue as well as sin, happiness as well as unhappiness is unalterably fixed for men by fate, and nothing in their destiny can be altered by the carrying out of the holy law. It is, however, just as irreconcilable with the other Buddhist accounts of the teaching of their opponent; because it is absolutely unimaginable, that the same man, who lays vows upon his followers, the object of which is to avoid sin, could nevertheless make virtue and sin purely dependent upon the disposition of fate, and preach the uselessness of carrying out the law. The accusation that Nātaputta embraced fatalism must therefore be regarded as an invention and an outcome of sect hatred as well as of the wish to throw discredit on their opponents.

The Buddhist remarks on the personality and life of Nātaputta are still more remarkable. They say repeatedly that he laid claim to the dignity of an Arhat and to omniscience which the Jainas also 9 Jacobi, loc. cit. p. 160, and Leumann, Actes du VJième Congrès Int. des Or. Sect. Ary. p. 505. As the Jaina accounts of the teaching of Pārśva and the existence of communities of his disciples, sound trustworthy, we may perhaps accept, with Jacobi, that they rest on a historical foundation.

10 Jacobi loc. cit. p. 159—160.
claim for their prophet, whom they prefer simply to call 'the Arhat' and who possesses the universe-embracing 'Kevala' knowledge 1. A history of conversions, tells us further that Nātaputta and his disciples disdained to cover their bodies; we are told just the same of Vardhamāna 2. A story in the oldest part of the Singalese canon gives an interesting and important instance of his activity in teaching. Buddha, so the legend runs, once came to the town Vaiśālī, the seat of the Kshatriya of the Lichchhāvi race. His name, his law, his community were highly praised by the nobles of the Lichchhāvi in the senate-house. Sīha, their general, who was a follower of the Nigaṇṭha, became anxious to know the great teacher. He went to his master Nātaputta, who happened to be staying in Vaiśālī just then, and asked permission to pay the visit. Twice Nātaputta refused him. Then Sīha determined to disobey him. He sought Buddha out, heard his teaching and was converted by him. In order to show his attachment to his new teacher he invited Buddha and his disciples to eat with him. On the acceptance of the invitation, Sīha commanded his servants to provide flesh in honour of the occasion. This fact came to the ears of the followers of the Nigaṇṭha. Glad to have found an occasion to damage Buddha, they hurried in great numbers

1 See for example the account in the Chullavagga, in S. B. E. Vol. XX. p. 78—79; Ind. Antiq. Vol. VIII, p. 313.
2 Spence Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, p. 225.
through the town, crying out, that Siha had caused a great ox to be killed for Buddha's entertainment; that Buddha had eaten of the flesh of the animal although he knew it had been killed on his account, and was, therefore guilty of the death of the animal. The accusation was brought to Siha's notice and was declared by him to be a calumny. Buddha, however preached a sermon after the meal, in which he forbade his disciples to partake of the flesh of such animals as had been killed on their account. The legend also corroborates the account in the Jaina works, according to which Vardhamâna often resided in Vaiśālî and had a strong following in that town. It is probably related to show that his sect was stricter, as regards the eating of flesh, than the Buddhists, a point, which again agrees with the statutes of the Jainas.

The account of Nâtaputta's death is still more important. "Thus I heard it", says an old book of the Singalese canon, the Sâmagâma Sutta, "once the Venerable one lived in Sâmagâma in the land of the Sâkya. At that time, however, certainly the Nîgañṭha Nâtaputta had died in Pâvâ. After his death the Nîgañṭha wandered about disunited, separate, quarrelling, fighting, wounding each other with words. Here we have complete confirmation

4 The passage is given in the original by Oldenberg, Zeitsch. der D. Morg. Ges. Bd. XXXIV, S. 749. Its significance in connection with the Jaina tradition as to their schisms has been of the statement of the Jaina canon as to the place where Vardhamâna entered Nirvâna, as well as of the statement that a schism occurred immediately after his death.

The harmony between the Buddhist and Jaina tradition, as to the person of the head of the Nirgrantha is meanwhile imperfect. It is disturbed by the description of Nâtaputta as a member of the Brâhmanic sect of the Âgniveśyâyâna, whilst Vardhamâna belonged to the Kâśyapa. The point is however so insignificant, that an error on the part of the Buddhists is easily possible. It is quite to be understood that perfect exactness is not to be expected among the Buddhists or any other sect in describing the person of a hated enemy.

overlooked until now. It has also been unnoticed that the assertion, that Vardhamâna died during Buddha's lifetime, proves that the latest account of this occurrence given by traditions 467 B. C. is false: Later Buddhist legends (Spence Hardy, Manual of Budhism, pp. 266—271) treat of Nâtaputta's death in more detail. In a lengthy account they give as the cause of the same the apostacy of one of his disciples, Upâli who was converted by Buddha. After going over to Buddhism, Upâli treated his former master with scorn, and presumed to relate a parable which should prove the foolishness of those who believed in false doctrines. Thereupon the Nigantha fell into despair. He declared his alms-vessel was broken, his existence destroyed, went to Pâvâ, and died there. Naturally no importance is to be given to this account and its details. They are apparently the outcome of sect-hatred.

According to Jacobi's supposition, S. B. E. Vol. XXII, p. xvi, the error was caused, by the only disciple of Vardhamâna, who outlived his master, Sudharman being an Âgniveśyâyâna.
Enmity and scorn, always present, forbid that. The most that one can expect is that the majority and most important of the facts given may agree. This condition is undoubtedly fulfilled in the case on hand. It cannot, therefore be denied, that, in spite of this difference, in spite also of the absurdity of one article of the creed ascribed to him, Vardhamâna Jñâtiputra, the founder of the Nirgrantha—or Jaina community is none other than Buddha's rival. From Buddhist accounts in their canonical works as well as in other books, it may be seen that this rival was a dangerous and influential one, and that even in Buddha's time his teaching had spread considerably. Their legends about conversions from other sects very often make mention of Nirgrantha sectarians, whom Buddha's teaching or that of his disciples had alienated from their faith. Also they say in their descriptions of other rivals of Buddha, that these, in order to gain esteem, copied the Nirgrantha and went unclothed, or that they were looked upon by the people as Nirgrantha holy ones, because they happened to have lost their clothes. Such expressions would be inexplicable if Vardhamâna's community had not become of great importance.

This agrees with several remarks in the Buddhist chronicles, which assert the existence of the Jainas in different districts of India during the first century after Buddha’s death. In the memoirs of the Chinese Buddhist and pilgrim Hiuen Tsiang, who visited India in the beginning of the seventh century of our era, is to be found an extract from the ancient annals of Magadha, which proves the existence of the Nirgrantha or Jainas in their original home from a very early time 7. This extract relates to the building of the great monastery at Nālandā, the high school of Buddhism in eastern India, which was founded shortly after Buddha’s Nirvāṇa, and mentions incidentally that a Nirgrantha who was a great astrologer and prophet had prophesied the future success of the new building. At almost as early a period the Mahāvaṁsa, composed in the fifth century A.D., fixes the appearance of the Nirgrantha in the island of Ceylon. It is said that the king Paṇḍukabhāya, who ruled in the beginning of the second century after Buddha, from 367—307 B.C. built a temple and a monastery for two Nirgranthas. The monastery is again mentioned in the same work in the account of the reign of a later king Vatṭāgāmini, cir. 38—10 B.C. It is related that Vatṭāgāmini being offended by the inhabitants, caused it to be destroyed after it had existed during the reigns of twenty one kings, and erected a Buddhist Saṅghārāma in its place. The latter piece of information is found also in the Dīpavaṁsa of more than a century earlier 8.

8 Turnour, Mahāvaṁsa, pp. 66—67 and p. 203, 206: Dīpavaṁsa XIX 14; comp. also Kern, Buddhismus, Bd. I. S. 422. In the None of these works can indeed be looked upon as a truly historical source. There are, even in those paragraphs which treat of the oldest history after Buddha's death, proofs enough that they simply hand down a faulty historical tradition. In spite of this, their statements on the Nirgrantha, cannot be denied a certain weight, because they are closely connected on the one side with the Buddhist canon, and on the other they agree with the indisputable sources of history, which relate to a slightly later period.

The first authentic information on Vardhamâna's sect is given by our oldest inscriptions, the religious edicts of the Maurya king Asoka, who, according to tradition was anointed in the year 219 after Buddha's death, and — as the reference to his Grecian contemporaries, Antiochos, Magas, Alexander, Ptolemaeus and Antigonas confirms,—ruled, during the second half of the third century B.C. over the whole of India with the exception of the Dekhan, This prince interested himself not only in Buddhism, which he professed in his later years, but he took care, in a fatherly way, as he repeatedly relates, of all other religious sects in his vast kingdom. In the fourteenth year of his reign, he appointed officials, called law-superintendents, whose duty it was to watch over the life of the different communities, to settle their quarrels, to control the distribution first passage in the Mahâvañsa, three Nighañyas are introduced by name, Jotiya, Giri, and Kumbhañña. The translation incorrectly makes the first a Brähman and chief engineer. of their legacies and pious gifts. He says of them in the second part of the seventh ‘pillar’ edict, which he issued in the twenty-ninth year of his reign, “My superintendents are occupied with various charitable matters, they are also engaged with all sects of ascetics and householders; I have so arranged that they will also be occupied with the affairs of the Saṃgha; likewise I have arranged that they will be occupied with the Ājīvika Brāhmaṇs; I have arranged it that they will also be occupied with the Nigāṇṭha”. The word Saṃgha serves here as usual for the Buddhist monks. The Ājīvikas, whose name completely disappears later, are often named in the sacred writings of the Buddhists and the Jainas as an influential sect. They enjoyed the special favour of Aśoka, who, as other inscriptions testify, caused several caves at Barābar to be made into dwellings for their ascetics. As in the still older writings of the Buddhist canon, the name Nigāṇṭha here can refer only to the followers of Vardhamāna. As they are here, along with the other two favourites, counted worthy of special mention, we may certainly conclude that they were of no small importance at the time. Had they been without influence and of small numbers Aśoka would hardly have known of them, or at least would not have singled them out from the other numerous nameless sects of which he often speaks. It may also be supposed that they were specially numerous in their old home, as Aśoka’s capital Pāṭaliputra lay in this land. Whether they spread far over these boundaries, cannot be ascertained.

10 See Ind. Antiquary, vol. XX, pp. 361 ff.

On the other hand we possess two documents from the middle of the next century which prove that they advanced into south-eastern India as far as Kāliṅga. These are the inscriptions at Khaṇḍagiri in Orissa, of the great King Khāravela and his first wife, who governed the east coast of India from the year 152 to 165 of the Maurya era that is, in the first half of second century B.C.

The larger inscription, unfortunately very much disfigured, contains an account of the life of Khāravela from his childhood till the thirteenth year of his reign. It begins with an appeal to the Arhat and Siddha, which corresponds to the beginning of the five-fold form of homage still used among the Jainas, and mentions the building of temples in honour of the Arhat as well as an image of the first Jina, which was taken away by a hostile king. The second and smaller inscription asserts that Khāravela’s wife caused a cave to be prepared for the ascetics of Kaliṅga, “who believed on the Arhat.”

1 The meaning of these inscriptions, which were formerly believed to be Buddhist, was first made clear by Dr. Bhagvânlâl’s Indrâji’s
From a somewhat later period, as the characters show, from the first century B.C. comes a dedicatory inscription which has been found far to the west of the original home of the Jainas, in Mathurâ on the Jamnâ. It tells of the erection of a small temple in honour of the Arhat Vardhamâna, also of the dedication of seats for the teachers, a cistern, and a stone table. The little temple, it says, stood beside the temple of the guild of tradesmen, careful discussion in the Actes du VIème Congrès Internat. des Orientalistes Sect. Ary. pp. 135—159. He first recognised the true names of the King Khâravela and his predecessors and shewed that Khâravela and his wife were patrons of the Jainas. We have to thank him for the information that the inscription contains a date in the Maurya Era. I have thoroughly discussed his excellent article in the Oesterreichischen Monatsschrift, Bd. X, S. 231 ff. and have there given my reasons for differing from him on an important point, namely, the date of the beginning of the Maurya Era, which, according to his view begins with the conquest of Kaliâga by Aśoka about 255 B. C. Even yet I find it impossible to accept that the expression, "in the hundred and sixty fifth year of the era of the Maurya Kings", can mean anything else than that 164 years have passed between the thirteenth year of the rule of Khâravela and the anointing of the first Maurya King Chandragupta. Unfortunately it is impossible to fix the year of the latter occurrence, or to say more than that it took place between the years 322 and 312 B. C. The date given in Khâravela's inscription cannot therefore be more closely fixed than that it lies between 156 and 147 B. C. I now add to my former remarks—that appeals to the Arhat and Siddha appear also in Jaina inscriptions from Mathurâ and may be taken as a certain mark of the sect. Thus it is worthy of note that even in Hiuen Tsiang's time, (Beal, Si-yu-ki. Vol. II, p. 205) Kalinga was one of the chief seats of the Jainas.
and this remark proves, that Mathurâ, which, according to the tradition of the Jainas, was one of the chief seats of their religion, possessed a community of Jainas even before the time of this inscription.

A large member of dedicatory inscriptions have come to light, which are dated from the year 5 to 98 of the era of the Indo-Skythian kings, Kanishka, Huvishka, and Vâsudeva (Bazodeo) and therefore belong at latest to the end of the first and to the second century A.D. They are all on the pedestals of statues, which are recognisable partly by the special mention of the names of Vârdhamâna and the Arhat Mahâvîra, partly by absolute nudity and other marks. They show, that the Jaina community continued to flourish in Mathurâ and give besides extraordinarily important information, as I found in a renewed research into the ancient history of the sect. In a number of them, the dedicators of the statues give not only their own names, but also those of the religious teachers to whose communities they belonged. Further, they give these teachers their official titles, still used among the Jainas: vâchaka, 'teacher', and gañin, 'head of a school'. Lastly they specify the names of the schools to which the teachers belonged, and those of their subdivisions. The schools are called, gâna, 'companies'; the subdivisions, kula, 'families'.

This inscription also was first made known by Dr Bhagwanlal Indraji, loc. cit. p. 143.
and śâkhâ, ‘branches’, Exactly the same division into gaṇa, śâkhâ, and kula is found in a list in one of the canonical works, of the Śvetámbaras, the Kalpasûtra, which gives the number of the patriarchs and of the schools founded by them, and it is of the highest importance, that, in spite of mutilation and faulty reproduction of the inscriptions, nine of the names, which appear in the Kalpasûtra are recognisable in them, of which part agree exactly, part, through the fault of the stone-mason or wrong reading by the copyist, are somewhat defaced. According to the Kalpasûtra, Sushita, the ninth successor to Vardhamâna in the position of patriarch, together with his companion Suprâti-buddha, founded the ‘Koḍiya’ or ‘Kauṭika gaṇa’, which split up into four ‘śâkhâ’, and four ‘kula’. Incription No. 4. which is dated in the year 9 of the king Kanishka or 87. A.D. (?) gives us a somewhat ancient form of the name of the gaṇa Koṭiya and that of one of its branches exactly corresponding to the Vairi śâkhâ. Mutilated or wrongly written, the first word occurs also in inscriptions Nos. 2, 6 and 9 as koto-, keṭṭiya, and ka . . ., the second in No. 6 as Vorâ. One of the families of this gaṇa, the Vâṇiya kula is mentioned in No. 6, and perhaps in No. 4. The name of a second, the Praśnavâhanâka, seems to have appeared in No. 19. The last inscription mentions also another branch of the Koṭiya gaṇa, the Majhimâ sâkhâ, which, according to the Kalpasûtra, was founded by Priyagantha the second disciple of Susthita. Two still older schools which, according to tradition, sprang from the fourth disciple of the eighth patriarch, along with some of their divisions appear in inscriptions Nos. 20 and 10. These are the Āryya-Udehikiya gaṇa, called the school of the Ārya-Rohana in the Kalpasūtra, to which belonged the Parihāsaka kula and the Pūrṇapātrikā sākhā, as also the Chāraṇa gaṇa with the Pritidharāmīka kula. Each of these names is, however, somewhat mutilated by one or more errata in writing.

The statements in the inscriptions about the teachers and their schools are of no small importance in themselves for the history of the Jainas. If, at the end of the first century A.D.(?) many separate schools of Jaina ascetics existed, a great age and lively activity, as well as great care as regards the traditions of the sect, may be inferred. The agreement of the inscriptions with the Kalpasūtra leads still further however: it proves on the one side that the Jainas of Mathurā were Śvetāmbara, and that the schism, which split the sect into two rival branches occurred long before the beginning of our era. On the other hand it proves that the tradition of the Śvetāmbara really contains ancient historic elements, and by no means deserves to be looked upon with distrust. It is quite probable that, like all traditions, it is not altogether free from error. But it can no longer be declared to be the result of a later intentional misrepresentation, made in order to conceal the dependence of Jainism on Buddhism. It is no longer possible to dispute its authenticity with regard to those points which are confirmed by independent statements of other sects, and to assert, for example, that the Jaina account of the life of Vardhamâna, which agrees with the statements of the Buddhists, proves nothing as regards the age of Jainism because in the late fixing of the canon of the Śvetâmbaras in the sixth century after Christ it may have been drawn from Buddhist works. Such an assertion which, under all circumstances, is a bold one, becomes entirely untenable when it is found that the tradition in question states correctly facts which lie not quite three centuries distant from Vardhamâna’s time, and that the sect, long before the first century of our era kept strict account of their internal affairs.

3 Dr. Bühler's long note (p. 48) on these inscriptions was afterwards expanded in the Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes Bd. I, S. 165—180; Bd. II, S. 141—146. Bd. III, S. 233—240; and Bd IV, S. 169—173. The argument of these papers is summarised in Appendix A, pp. 48 ff. — Ed.

Unfortunately the testimony to the ancient history of the Jainas, so far as made known by means of inscriptions, terminates here. Interesting as it would be to follow the traces of their communities in the later inscriptions, which become so numerous from the fifth century A.D. onwards and in the description of his travels by Hiuen Tsiang, who found them spread through the whole of India and even beyond its boundaries, it would be apart from our purpose. The documents quoted suffice, however, to confirm the assertion that during the first five centuries after Buddha's death both the statements of Buddhist tradition and real historical sources give evidence to the existence of the Jainas as an important religious community independent of Buddhism, and that there are among the historical sources some which entirely clear away the suspicion that the tradition of the Jainas themselves is intentionally falsified.

4 See Weber’s and Barth’s opinions quoted above in note 1, p. 23.

The advantage gained for Indian history from the conclusion that Jainism and Buddhism are two contemporary sects — having arisen in the same district,—is no small one. First, this conclusion shows that the religious movement of the sixth and fifth centuries B.C. in eastern India must have been a profound one. If not only one, but certainly two, and perhaps more reformers, appeared at the same time, preaching teachers, who opposed the existing circumstances in the same manner, and each of whom gained no small number of followers for their doctrines, the desire to overthrow the Brahmanical order of things must have been generally and deeply felt. This conclusion shows then that the transformation of the religious life in India was not merely the work of a religious community. Many strove to attain this object although separated from one another. It is now recognisable, though preliminarily, in one point only, that the religious history of India from the fifth century B.C. to the eighth or ninth A.D. was not made up of the fight between Brahmanism and Buddhism alone. This conclusion allows us, lastly, to hope that the thorough investigation of the oldest writings of the Jainas and their relations with Buddhism on the one hand and with Brahmanism on the other will afford many important ways of access to a more exact knowledge concerning the religious ideas which prevailed in the sixth and fifth centuries B.C., and to the establishment of the boundaries of originality between the different systems.
Copies of the mutilated inscriptions referred to, were published by General Sir A. Cunningham in his Archaeological Survey Reports, vol. III, plates xiii—xv. Unfortunately they have been presented from ‘copies’ and are therefore full of errors, which are due for the most part, doubtless, to the copyist and not to the sculptor. It is not difficult, however, in most cases under consideration here, to restore the correct reading. Usually only vowel signs are omitted or misread and, here, and there, consonants closely resembling one another as va and cha, va, and dha, ga and sa, la and na are interchanged.

The formulæ of the inscriptions are almost universally the same. First comes the date, then follows the name of a reverend teacher, next, the mention of the school and the subdivision of it to which he belonged. Then the persons, who dedicated the statues are named (mostly women), and who belonged to the community of the said teacher. The description of the gift forms the conclusion. The dialect of the inscriptions shows that curious mixture of Sanskrit and Prakrit which is found in almost all documents of the Indo-Skythian kings, and which — as Dr. Hoernle was the first to recognise — was one of the literary languages of northern and north-western India during the first centuries before and after the commencement of our era.

In the calculation of dates, I use the favourite starting point for the era of the Indo-Skythian kings, which unfortunately, is not certainly determined, and assume that it is identical with the Saka era of 78 1/4 A.D. The rule of these princes could not have fallen later: in my opinion it was somewhat earlier 1. I give here transcripts and restorations of such inscriptions as mention Jaina schools or titles.

1. The inscription which is the most important for my purpose and at the same time one of the best preserved, is Sir A. Cunningham’s No. 6, plate xiii, which was found on the base of a Jaina image (Arch. Surv. Rep. vol. III, p. 31). The copy compared with a rubbing gives the following reading, (the letters within parentheses are damaged):

L. i. Siddham saṁ 20 gramā 1 di 10 + 5 ko(ti)yato gañato (Vâ)ṇiyato kulato V(ai)r(i)to śākato Śirikato
2. (bha)tito vâchakasya Arîya-Saṅghasihhasya nîr(v)-varttanam Dattilasya ......... Vi:-
3. lasya ko(ṭhu)bi(ki)ya Jayavâlasya Devadâsasya Nâgadinasya cha Nâgadinâye cha (mâ)tu.
4. śrâ(vi)kâye (D)i-

1 What follows is from the author’s later and fuller paper in Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, Bd. I, S. 170 f., but abridged. — Ed.
5. (nâ)ye dânam. i
6. Varddhamâna pra-
7. timâ |

The lacuna in line 2, after Dattilasya, probably contained the word duhituye or dhûtuye and part of a male name of which only the letter vi is visible. In l. 3, possibly kothabiniye is to be read instead of kothubikiye. As there is room for one more letter at the end of the line, I propose to read mâtuye. In l. 5, Dinâye would stand for Dattâyâḥ and be the genitive of a female name Dinâ or Dattâ, which has been shortened bhâmâvat. There can be no doubt that the word śrī, or śiri, which is required, has stood before Vardhamâna. With these restorations the translation is as follows:

“Success! The year 20, summer (month) 1, day 15. An image of glorious Vardhamâna, the gift of the female lay-disciple Dinâ [i.e. Dinnâ or Datta], the [daughter] of Dattila, the wife of Vi..la, the mother of Jayavâla [Jayapâla], of Devadâsa and Nâgadâna [i.e. Nâgadinna or Nâgadatta] and of Nâgadîna [i.e. of Nâgadinna or Nâgadatta] — (this statue being) the nirvartana2 of the preacher Aryya-Saṅghasîha [i.e. Arya-

2 The word nirvartana has the meaning of ‘in obedience to the order’, or ‘in consequence of the request’. It occurs again in the Prakrit form nivatanaṃ below, in No. 10 (pl. xiv) and it has stood in No. 4, and at the end of l. 2 of No. 7, where the rubbing has nîrva.. It is also found in the next: Arch. Sur. Rep. vol. XX, pl. v, No. 6.
Saṅghasimha], out of the Koṭiya school, the Vāniya race, the Vairi branch, the Širikā division”.

The inscription given Arch. Sur. Rep. vol. XX, plate v, No. 6 reads, according to an excellent rubbing:

1. Namo Arahamtanam namo Siddhána sam 60⁴ + 2
2. gra 3 di 5 etâye purvâye Ràrakasya Aryaka- kasaghastasya
3. śisyâ Atapikogahabaryasya nirvartana chatu- varnasya samghasya
4. yâ. dinnâ paṭibhâ[bho?]ga 1 (?) | (?) Vaihikâya datti |

“Adoration to the Arhats, adoration to the Siddhas! The year 62, the summer (month) 3, the day 5; on the above date a yâ. was given to the community, which includes four classes, as an enjoyment (or one share for each) (this being) the nirvartana of Atapikogahabarya, the pupil of Arya-Kakasagha sta (Ārya-Karkasagharshita), a native of Rârâ (Râdhâ). The gift of Vaihikâ (or, Vaihitā).”

2. With the inscription No. 6 of the year 20, No. 4 (plate xiii) agrees; it was also found on a Jaina pedestal. With better readings from a rubbing of the first side only, I propose for the other portions, of which I have no rubbings, the following emendations,—1. 1, Vâniyato kulato, sâkhâto; l. 2, ku-tumbiniye; I also note that the lacuna in line 2, 3\textsuperscript{rd} and 4\textsuperscript{th} sides, would be filled exactly by ye śrī-Vardhamânasya pratimâ kâritâ sarvasattvâ. The former existence of the first and last seven letters may be considered certain. My restoration of the whole is,—

³ In reading the first figure as 60, I follow Sir A. Cunningham. I have never seen the sign in another inscription. The characters of the inscription are so archaic that this date may refer to an earlier epoch than the Indo-Skythian.

L. 1 (1\textsuperscript{st} side) Siddhamahârâjasya Kanishkasya râjye samvatsare navame [9] (2nd side) māse pratha 1 divase 5 a-(3\textsuperscript{rd})[syām] purṇa[ā]ye Koṭiyato gaṇato Vâniya[to] (4\textsuperscript{th}) [ku]lato Vairito sâkato vâchaka- 2. (1\textsuperscript{st} side) [syā] [N]âganaṁdisa ni[rva]r[ta]nām Brah[ma]...[dhû-(2\textsuperscript{nd})tuye] Bhaṭṭimitaṇa kuṭu[ṁ]bi-[n][y[ye] Vikatā-(3\textsuperscript{rd})[ye śrī Vardhamânasya pratimâ kâritâ sarva- (4\textsuperscript{th}) satvā]nām hita- 3. [sukhâye]; and the translation:—“Success! During the reign of the great king Kanîshka, in the ninth year, 9, in the first month, 1, of..., on the day 5,—on the above date [an image of glorious Vardhamâna has been caused to be made] for the welfare [and happiness] of [all created beings] by Vikatā, the house-wife of Bhaṭṭimita (Bhaṭṭimitra) and [daughter of] Brahma...—(this statue being) the nirvartana of the preacher Nâganaṁdi, out of the Koṭiya school (gaṇa), the Vâniya line (kula), (and) the Vairi branch (sâkhâ).”

If we now turn to the Kalpasûtra\textsuperscript{4}, we find that Suṭṭhiya or Sushthita, the eighth successor of Vardhamâna, founded the Kauṭika or Koḍiya gaṇa, which split up into four śâkhâs and four kulas. The third of the former was the Vajrî or Vairî, and the third of the latter was the Vâṇîya or Vâṇijja. It is evident that the names of the gaṇa, kula, and śâkhâ agree with those mentioned in the two inscriptions, Koṭiya being a somewhat older form of Koḍiya. But it is interesting to note that the further subdivision of the Vairî śâkhâ— the Śirikâ bhatti (Śrikâ bhakti) which inscription No. 6 mentions, is not known to the Kalpasūtra. This is a gap such as may be expected to occur in a list handed down by oral tradition.

3. The Koṭika gaṇa is again mentioned in the badly mutilated inscription No. 19, plate xv. A complete restoration is impossible.

L. 1. Saṁvatsare 90 va.............. sya kuṭubani. vaḍānasya vodhuya........

Majhamâto śâkhâto... sa nîkâye bhati gâlâe tha-bâṇi...........

It may, however, be inferred from the fragments of the first line that the dedication was made by a woman who was described as the wife (kuṭumbinī) of one person and as the daughter-in-law (vaḍhu) of another. The first part of line 2, restored as above gives—“in the congregation of.... out of the Koṭiya school, the Praśnavâhanaka line and the Majhamâ branch . . . . .” The restoration of the two names Kottiya and Praśnavâhanaka seems to me absolutely certain, because they exactly fill the blanks in the inscription, and because the information in the Kalpasūtra (S. B. E. vol. XXII, p. 293) regarding the Madhyamâ śâkhâ points in that direction. The latter work tells us that Priyagantha, the second pupil of Susthita and Supratibuddha, founded a śâkhâ, called Madhyamâ or Majhimâ.

As our inscriptions show that Professor Jacobi’s explanation of the terms gaṇa, kula and śâkhâ is correct and that the first denotes the school, the second the line of teachers, and the third a branch which separated from such a line, it follows that the śâkhâs named in the Kalpasūtra without the mention of a gaṇa and kula, must belong to the last preceding gaṇa and derive their origin from one of its kulas. Hence the Madhyamâ śâkhâ doubtless was included in the Kauṭika gaṇa, and an offshoot of one of its kulas, the fourth of which is called Praśnavâhanaka or Paṅhavâhanaya. The correctness of these inferences is proved by Rājaśekhara’s statement regarding his spiritual descent at the end of the Prabandha kosha, which he composed in Vik. samâ 1405. He informs us that he belonged to the Kotti gaṇa, the Praśnavâhana kula, the Madhyamâ śâkhâ, the Harshapuriya gachha and the Maladhâri saṃtâna, founded by the illustrious Abhayâsûri.

For the last words of l. 2 I do not dare to propose an emendation; I merely note that the gift seems to have consisted of pillars, thabâni, i.e. stambhâḥ.

4. The Koṭiya gaṇa seems finally to be mentioned in pl. xiii, No. 2, where the copy of line 1, 2nd side may be corrected as,— Siddha — sa 5 he 1 di 10 + 2 asyâ puruvâye Koṭ(iya).

5. Names of an older gaṇa and of one of its kulas occur in No. 10 plate xiv, where the copy, which is faulty, may allow the following partial restoration,—

L. 1. Sa 40 + 7 gra 2 di 20 etasyâ puruvâye Vârâne gaṇe Petidhamikakulavâchakasya Rohanadisyä śisasya Senasya nivatanam sâvaka- Da prapâ [di]nâ .. mâ ta ....

2. ............. pashânavadhaya Giha .. ka . bha ..

which I translate—

"The year 47, the summer (month) 2, the day 20,— on the above date a drinking fountain was given by ......., the .... of the lay-disciple Da ..... (this being) the nivatana of Sena the pupil of Rohanadi (Rohanand) and preacher of the Petidhamika (Praitidharmika) line, in the Vârâna school."

Varâne must be a mistake for the very similar word Chârane. The second kula of this gaṇa which, according to the Kalpasûtra (S. B. E. vol. XXII, p. 291) was founded by Śrīgūpta, the fifth pupil of Ārya Suhastin, is the Prītidharmika (p. 292). It is easy to see that a similar name is hidden in the compound Petivamikakutavāchakasya 'of the preacher of the Petivamika line'; and an inscription excavated by Dr. Führer at Mathurā mentions the Petivāmika (kula) of the Vārana gaṇa. With the second line little can be done: if the letters prapā are correct and form a word, one of the objects dedicated must have been a drinking fountain.

6. The inscription No. 20, plate xv offers likewise slightly corrupt and mutilated names of a gaṇa, a kula and a śākhā, mentioned in the Kalpasūtra. In the lithographed copy lines 3—7 are hopeless and there is no rubbing to help. The word thitu 'of a daughter' in line 6, and the following ma.uya which is probably a misreading of mātuye 'of the mother' show that this dedication also was made by a female. The last four syllables vato maho are probably the remnant of another namaskāra—namo bhagavato Mahāvīrasya. As regards the proper names, Aryya Rehiniya is an impossible form; but on comparison with the next inscription to be mentioned, it is evident that the stone must have read Aryyodehikiyato or Aryyadehikiyato gaṇato[6]. According to the Kalpasūtra (S. B. E. vol. XXII, p. 291) Ārya-Rohana was the first pupil of Ārya Suhastin and founded the Uddevha gaṇa. The latter split up into four śākhās and into six kulas. The name of its fourth sákha, Pūrnāpatrikā, closely resembles—especially in its consonantal elements—that of the inscription, Petaputrikā, and I do not hesitate in correcting the latter to Ponapatrikā which would be the equivalent of Sansk. Paurṇapatrikā. Among the six kulas is the Parihāsaka, and considering the other agreements, I believe it probable that the mutilated name read as Puridha.ka is a misreading of Parihāka. We may emend the first two times and read as follows,—

3. ryya-Kshemasya
4. prakagirīne
5. kihadiye prajā
6. tasya Pravarakasya dhitu Varaṇasya gatvakasya ma[t]uya Mitra(?)sa ........... datta gā

7. ye .. [namo bhaga[vato mah[āvīrasaya] and the translation (so far) will be,—

"Success! Adoration to the Arhat Mahāvīra, the destroyer (?) of the gods. In the year of king Vāsudeva, 98, in the month 4 of the rainy season, on the day 11—on the above date ............ .... of the chief of the school (gaṇin) Āryya-Devadatta (Devadatta) out of the school (gaṇa) of the Āryya-Udehikīya (Ārya-Udehikīya), out of the Parihāsaka line (kula), out of the Ponapatrika (Paurṇapatrika) branch (sākhā).”

These and many other statements in the inscriptions, about the teachers and their schools are of no small importance in themselves for the early history of the Jainas. The agreement of the above with the Kalpasūtra can best be shown by placing the statements in question against one another. The inscriptions prove the actual existence of twenty of the subdivisions mentioned in the Sthavirāvalī of the Kalpasūtra. Among its eight gaṇas we can certainly trace three, possibly four — the Uddehika, Vāraṇa, Vesavādiya (?) and Koḍiya.

Inscriptions.

1. Koṭṭiya (Koḍiya) Gaṇa

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bramadāsika kula</th>
<th>Uchchenāgari sākhā</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Šāṭhāniya kula</td>
<td>Vairī, Vairiyā sākhā</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Sthavirāvalī of the Kalpasūtra (Sac. Bks. of The East, vol. XXII, p. 292) states that Susțhita and Supratibuddha founded the —

Koṭiya or Kauṭṭaka Gaṇa

1. Bambhalijja
2. Vachchhalijja
3. Vâniya or Vâniijja
4. Panhavâhanaya or Praśnavâhanaka

1. Ucchchanâgarī
2. Vījñhâharī
3. Vajrī
4. Majjhimâka
5. Majjhîma

(founded by Priyagantha the second scholar of the two teachers).

Inscriptions: —

2. Vâraṇa Gaṇa

Petivamika
Āryya Hâṭikiya Puṣyamitriya
Āryya-Chetiya
Kaniyasika

Vâjanâgarī šâkhâs Haritamâlakaḍhī

The Kalpasūtra states that Śrīgupta of the Hâritagotra founded the Châraṇa gaṇa, which was divided into four šâkhâs and into seven kulas:

Châraṇa-gaṇa

1. Vachchhalijja
2. Piṭdhammiya
3. Hâlijja
4. Pâsamittijja
5. Mâlijja
6. Ārya-Čheḍaya
7. Kaṇhasaha

Saṃkâśikā
Vajjanâgarī Gavedhukâ Hâriyamâlâgârî

Inscriptions: —

3. Āryya-Udekiya Gaṇa

Nâgabhutikiya Puridha... kulas

Petaputrikâ šâkhâ.
The Kalpasūtra says Ārya-Rohana of the Kāśyapa gotra founded the

Uddeha Gaṇa

1. Nāgabhūya
2. Somabhūta
3. Ullagachchha (or Ārdarakachchha?)
4. Hatthilijja
5. Nandijja
6. Parihāsaka

Inscriptions:

4. [Veśavāḍiya Gaṇa] ⁸

[Me]hika kula

The Kalpasūtra: — Kāmarddhi of the Kuṇḍala gotra founded the Veśavāṭika gaṇa which was divided into four śākhās, and into four kulas: —

Veśavāṭika Gaṇa

Gaṇika
Maigika
Kāmarddhika Indrapuraka

Šrāvastikā Rajjapāliyā Antarijjiyā Khemalijjiyā

The resemblance of most of these names is so complete that no explanation is necessary.

⁹ For the above lists see Wiener Zeitschr. Bd. IV, S. 316 ff. and Kalpasūtra in S. B. E. vol. XXII, pp. 290 f.
The mythology of the Jainas, whilst including many of the Hindu divinities, to which it accords very inferior positions, is altogether different in composition. It has all the appearance of a purely constructed system. The gods are classified and subdivided into orders, genera, and species; all are mortal, have their ages fixed, as well as their abodes, and are mostly distinguished by cognizances chihnas or lāṇchhaṇas. Their Tīrthakaras, Tīrthamkaras, or perfected saints, are usually known as twenty-four belonging to the present age. But the mythology takes account also of a past and a future age or renovation of the world, and to each of these æons are assigned twenty-four Tīrthakaras. But this is not all: in their cosmogony they lay down other continents besides Jambūdvīpa-Bharata or that which we dwell in. These are separated from Jambūdvīpa by impassable seas, but exactly like it in every respect and are called Dhātuki-kāṇḍa and Pushkara-ardha; and of each of these there are eastern and western Bharata and Airāvata regions, whilst of Jambūdvipa there is also a Bharata and an Airāvata region: these make the following ten regions or worlds: —

1. Jambūdvipa-bharata-kshetra.
2. Dhâtuki-khaṇḍa pûrva-bharata.
3. Dhâtuki-khaṇḍa paśchima-bharata.
4. Pushkarârddha pûrva-bharata.
5. Pushkaravaradvipa paśchima-bharata.
7. Dhâtuki-khaṇḍa pûrva-airāvata.
8. Dhâtuki-khaṇḍa paśchima-airāvata.

To each of these is allotted twenty four past, present and future Atīṭs or Jinas,—making in all 720 of this class, for which they have invented names: but they are only names¹.

Of the Tirthakaras of the present age or avasar-pini in the Bharata-varsha of Jambūdvipa, however, we are supplied with minute details:—their names, parents, stations, reputed ages, complexions, attendants, cognizances (chihna) or characteristics, etc. and these details are useful for the explanation of the iconography we meet with in the shrines of Jaina temples. There the images of the Tirthakaras are placed on highly sculptured thrones and surrounded by other smaller attendant figures. In temples of the Śvetâmbara sect the images are generally of marble,—white in most cases, but often black for images of the 19th, 20th, 22nd and 23rd Jinas. On the front of the throne or āsana are usually carved three small figures: at the proper right of the Jina is a male figure representing the Yaksha attendant or servant of that particular Jina; at the left end of the throne is the corresponding female — or Yakshîṇî, Yakshi or Śâsanadevî; whilst in a panel in the middle there is often another devî. At the base of the seat also, are placed nine very small figures representing the navagraha or nine planets; that is the sun, moon, five planets, and ascending and descending nodes.

¹ See Ratnasāgara, bh. II, pp. 696—705.

In the Jaina Purânas, legends are given to account for the connexion of the Yakshas and Yakshîs with their respective Tirthakaras: thus, in the case of Pârśvanâtha, we have a story of two brothers Marubhûti and Kamaṭha, who in eight successive incarnations were always enemies, and were finally born as Pârśvanâtha and Sambara Deva respectively. A Pâshanâḍa or unbeliever, engaged in the panchâgni rite, when felling a tree for his fire, against the remonstrance of Pârśvanâtha, cut in pieces two snakes that were in it; the Jina, however restored hem to life by means of the paṇchamantra. They were then re-born in Pâtâla-loka as Dharanendra or Nâgendra-Yaksha and Padmâvatî-Yakshîṇî. When Sambara Deva or Meghakumâra afterwards attacked the Arhat with a great storm, whilst he was engaged in the Kâyotsarga austerity — standing immovable, exposed to the weather — much in the way that Māra attacked Śākya Buddha at Bodh-gayā, Dharaṇendra's throne in Pātāla thereupon shook, and the Nāga or Yaksha with his consort at once sped to the protection of his former benefactor. Dharaṇendra spread his many hoods over the head of the Arhata and the Yakshiṇī Padmāvatī held a white umbrella (sveta chhatrī) over him for protection. Ever after they became his constant attendants, just as Śakra was to Buddha. The legend is often represented in old-sculptures, in the cave-temples at Bādāmi, Elura, etc., and the figure of Pārśva is generally carved with the snake-hoods (Śeshapāṇi) over him.2

Other legends account for the attachment of each pair of Śāsanadevatās to their respective Jinas.

The Śvetāmbaras and Digambaras agree generally in the details respecting the different Tirthakaras; but, from information furnished from Maisur, they seem to differ as to the names of the Yakshiṇīs attached to the several Tirthakaras, except the first and last two; they differ also in the names of several of the Jinas of the past and the future æons. The Digambaras enlist most of the sixteen Vidyādevis or goddesses of knowledge among the Yakshinis, whilst the other sect include scarcely a third of them. These Vidyâdevîs, as given by Hemachandra, are — (1) Rohini; (2) Prajñâpti; (3) Vajrasriñkhalâ; (4) Kuliśankusâ — probably the Ankuśâ-Yakshî of the Śvetâmbara fourteenth Jina; (5) Chakresvari; (6) Naradattâ or Purushadattâ; (7) Kâlî or Kâlikâ; (8) Mahâkâlî; (9) Gaurî; (10) Gândhârî; (11) Sarvâ-stramahâjvâlâ; (12) Mânâvî; (13) Vairoṭyâ; (14) Ach-chhuptâ; (15) Mânasi; and (16) Mahâmânasikâ.

The images of the Tîrthakaras are always represented seated with their legs crossed in front — the toes of one foot resting close upon the knee of the other; and the right hand lies over the left in the lap. All are represented exactly alike except that Pârśvanâtha, the twenty-third, has the snake-hoods over him; and, with the Digambaras, Supârśva — the seventh, has also a smaller group of snake hoods. The Digambara images are all quite nude; those of the Śvetâmbaras are represented as clothed, and they decorate them with crowns and ornaments. They are distinguished from one another by their attendant Yakshas and Yakshinis as well as by their respective chihnas or cognizances which are carved on the cushion of the throne.

All the Jinas are ascribed to the Ikshvâku family (kula) except the twentieth Munisuvrata and twenty-second Neminâtha, who were of the Harivaîśa race. All received dikshâ or consecration at their native places; and all obtained jñâna or complete enlightenment at the same, except Rishabha who became a Kevalin at Purimatâla, Nemi at Girnâr, and Mahâvira at the Rijupâlukâ river; and twenty of them died or obtained moksha (deliverance in bliss) on Sameta-Šikhara or Mount Pârśvanâtha in the west of Bengal. But Rishabha, the first, died on Ashtâpada — supposed to be Satruñjaya in Gujarât; Vâsupûjya died at Champ-pâpuri in north Bengal; Neminâtha on mount Girnâr; and Mahâvira, the last, at Pâvâpuri.

Twenty-one of the Tîrthakaras are said to have attained Moksha in the Kâyotsarga (Guj. Kâüsagga) posture, and Rishabha, Nemi, and Mahâvira on the padmâsana or lotus throne.

For sake of brevity the following particulars for each Arhat are given below in serial order viz.:

1. The vimâna or vâhana (heaven) from which he descended for incarnation.
2. Birthplace, and place of consecration or dikshâ.
4. Cognizance — chhîna or lâñchhâna.
5. Height; and (7) Age.
6. Diksha-vriksha or Bodhi tree.
7. Yaksha and Yakshinî, or attendant spirits.
8. First Gaṇadharâ or leading disciple, and first Āryâ or leader of the female converts.

I. Rishabhadeva, Vrishabha, Adinâtha or Adisvara Bhagavan: — (1) Sarvârtha-siddha; (2) Vinit-tanagarî in Kośalâ and Purimatâla; (3) Nâbhîrâjâ by Marudevâ; (4) golden — varṇâ; (5) the bull, — vrîsha, balada; (6) 500 poles or dhanusha; (7) 8,400,000 pûrva or great years; (8) the Vaṭa or banyan tree; (9) Gomukha and Chakreśvarî; (10) Pundarīka and Brahmi.

II. Ajitānātha: (1) Vijayavimāṇa; (2) Ayodhyā; (3) Jītāsatru by Vijayāmātā; (4) golden; (5) the elephant — gaja or hasti; (6) 450 poles; (7) 7,200,000 pûrva years; (8) Śāla — the Shorea robusta; (9) Mahā-yaksha and Ajitabalā: with the Digambaras, the Yakshiṇī is Rohiṇī-yakshi; (10) Śīṃhasena and Phālgu.

III. Sambhavanātha: (1) Uvarimagraiveka; (2) Sāvathi or Śrāvasti; (3) Jītāri by Senāmātā; (4) golden; (5) the horse, — aśva, ghoda; (6) 400 poles; (7) 6,000,000 pûrva years; (8) the Prayāla — Buchanania latifolia; (9) Trīmukha and Duritāri (Digambara — Prajñapti); (10) Chāru and Śyāmā.

IV. Abhinandana: (1) Jayantavimāṇa; (2) Ayodhyā; (3) Sambararājā by Siddhārthā; (4) golden; (5) the ape, — plavaga, vānara or kapi; (6) 350 poles; (7) 5,000,000 pûrva years; (8) the Priyaṅgu or Panicum italicum; (9) Nāyaka and Kālikā, and Digambara — Yakṣheśvara and Vajraśriṅkhalā; (10) Vajranābha and Ajitā.

V. Sumatinātha: (1) Jayantavimāṇa; (2) Ayodhyā; (3) Megharājā by Māṅgalā; (4) golden; (5) the curlew, — krauṇčha, (Dig. chakravakapākshā — the Brāhmaṇi or red goose); (6) 300 poles; (7) 4,000,000 pûrva years; (8) Śāla tree; (9) Tumburu and Mahā-kalī (Dig. Purushadattā); (10) Charama and Kāśyapi.

VI. Padmaprabha: (1) Uvarimagraiveka; (2) Kauśambi; (3) Śrīdhara by Susimā; (4) red (rakta);
(5) a lotus bud — padma, abja, or kamala; (6) 250 poles; (7) 3,000,000 púrva years; (8) the Chhatrâ — (Anethum sowá?); (9) Kusuma and Šyâmâ (Dig. Manovegâ or Manoguptî); (10) Pradyotana and Ratî.

VII. Supârśvanâtha: (1) Madhyamagraiveka; (2) Varâṇaśi; (3) Pratishṭharâjâ by Pîthvi; (4) golden \(^3\); (5) the swastika symbol; (6) 200 poles; (7) 2,000,000 púrva years; (8) the Śirîsha or Acacia sirisha; (9) Mâtaṅga and Šântâ; — Digambara, Varanandi and Kâlî; (10) Vidirbha and Somâ.

VIII. Chandraprabha: (1) Vijayanta; (2) Chandrapura; (3) Mahâsenarâjâ by Lakshmanâ; (4) white — dhañvala, śubhra; (5) the moon — chandrâ or śaśi; (6) 150 poles; (7) 1,000,000 púrva years; (8) the Nâga tree; (9) Vijaya and Bhrikuṭî: Digambara — Śyâma or Vijaya and Jvâlâmâlinî; (10) Dîna and Sumanâ.

IX. Suvidhinâtha or Pushpadanta: (1) Ānata-devaloka; (2) Kânaṇḍinagari; (3) Sugrivarâja by Râmâ-râṇî; (4) white; (5) the Makara (Dig. the crab — ēdi); (6) 100 poles; (7) 200,000 púrva years; (8) the Śâli; (9) Ajita and Sutârákâ: Digambara — Ajita and Mahâkâlî or Ajitâ; (10) Varâhaka and Vâruṇî.

X. Śitalanâtha: (1) Achyutadevaloka; (2) Bhadrapurâ or Bhadilapura; (3) Drûdharatha-râjâ by Nandâ; (4) golden; (5) the Śrivatsa figure: (Dig. Śri-vriksha the ficus religiosa); (6) 90 poles; (7) 100,000 púrva years; (8) the Priyaṅgu tree; (9) Brahmâ and Ašokâ (Dig. Mânavi); (10) Nanda and Sujasâ.

\(^3\) The Digambaras describe the colours of the seventh and twenty-first Jinas as marakada or emerald coloured.
XI. Śreyāṁśanātha or Śreyasa: (1) Achyuta-devaloka; (2) Simhapuri; (3) Vishnurājā by Vishnā; (4) golden; (5) the rhinoceros — khadga, geṇḍā: (Dig. Garuḍa); (6) 80 poles; (7) 8,400,000 common years; (8) the Taṇḍuka tree; (9) Yakṣet and Mānavi: Digambara — Īśvara and Gaurī; (10) Kaśyapa and Dhāraṇī.

XII. Vāsupūjya: (1) Prāṇata-devaloka; (2) Cham-pāpuri; (3) Vasupūjya by Jayā; (4) ruddy — rakta, Guj. rātuṇī; (5) the female buffalo — mahishi, pādā; (6) 70 poles; (7) 7,200,000 common years; (8) the Pāṭala or Bignonia suaveolens; (9) Kumāra and Chaṇḍā (Dig. Gāndhāri); (10) Subhuma and Dharāṇī.

XIII. Vimalanātha: (1) Mahasāradevaloka; (2) Kampilyapura; (3) Kṛtavarmarāja by Śyāmā; (4) golden; (5) a boar — sākara, varāha; (6) 60 poles; (7) 6,000,000 years; (8) the Jāmbo or Eugenia jambolana; (9) Shāṃmukha and Viditā (Dig. Vairōti); (10) Mandara and Dharā.

XIV. Anantanātha or Anantajit: (1) Prāṇata-devaloka; (2) Ayodhyā; (3) Simhasena by Suyasāh or Sujasā; (4) golden; (5) a falcon — śyena (Dig. bhallīka a bear); (6) 50 poles; (7) 3,000,000 years; (8) the Asoka or Jonesia asoka; (9) Pāṭala and Aṅkuśā (Dig. Anantamati); (10) Jasa and Padmā.

XV. Dharmanātha: (1) Vijayavimāna; (2) Ratnapuri; (3) Bhānurājā by Suvritā; (4) golden; (5) the thunderbolt — vajra; (6) 45 poles; (7) 1,000,000 years; (8) Dadhiparṇa tree (Clitoria ternatea?); (9) Kinnara and Kandarpâ (Dig. Mânasi); (10) Arishṭa and Arthaśivā.

XVI. Sāntinātha: (1) Sarvârthasiddha; (2) Gajapura or Hastinapurī; (3) Viśvasena by Achirā; (4) golden; (5) an antelope—mṛīga, harana, hūlī; (6) 40 poles; (7) 100,000 years; (8) the Nandī or Cedrela toona; (9) Garuḍa and Nirvāṇī (Dig. Kimpurusha and Mahāmānasī); (10) Chakrāyuddha and Suchī.

XVII. Kunthunātha: (1) Sarvārthasiddha; (2) Gajapura; (3) Sūrarājā by Śrīrāṇī; (4) golden; (5) a goat—chhāga or aja; (6) 35 poles; (7) 95,000 years; (8) the Bhilaka tree; (9) Gandharva and Balā (Dig. Vijayā); (10) Sāmba and Dāmini.

XVIII. A ranātha: (1) Sarvārthasiddha; (2) Gajapura; (3) Sudarśana by Devirāṇī; (4) golden; (5) the Nandyāvarta diagram, (Dig. Mīna — the zodiacal Pisces); (6) 30 poles; (7) 84,000 years; (8) Āmbā or Mango tree; (9) Yaksheṭa and Dhaṇā (Dig. Kendra and Ajitā); (10) Kumbha and Rakshitā.

XIX. Mallinātha: (1) Jayantadevaloka; (2) Mathurā; (3) Kumbharājā by Prabhāvatī; (4) blue—nīla; (5) a jar — kumbham, kalaśa or ghaṭa; (6) 25 poles; (7) 55,000 years; (8) Aśoka tree; (9) Kubera and Dharānapriyā (Dig. Aparājitā); (10) Abhikshaka and Bandhumatī.

XX. Munisuvrata, Suvrata or Muni: (1) Aparājita-devaloka; (2) Rājagriha; (3) Sumitrarājā by Padmāvatī; (4) black—śyāma, asita; (5) a tortoise—kūrma; (6) 20 poles; (7) 30,000 years; (8) the Champaka, Michelia champaka; (9) Varuṇa and Naradattā, (Dig. Bahurūpiṇī); (10) Malli and Pushpavatī.

XXI. Nāminātha, Nimi or Nimesvara: (1) Prāṇata-devaloka; (2) Mathurā; (3) Vijayarājā by Viprārāṇī; (4) yellow; (5) the blue water-lily — nilotpala, with the Digambaras, sometimes the Aśoka tree; (6) 15 poles; (7) 10,000 years; (8) the Bakula or Mimusops elengi; (9) Bhṛikuṭi and Gandhāri, (Dig. Chāmuṇḍī); (10) Šubha and Anilā.

XXII. Nemīnātha or Arishṭanemi: (1) Aparājīta; (2) Sauripura (Prākrit — Soriyapura) and Ujjinta or Mount Gīrnār; (3) Samudravijaya by Śivādevi; (4) black — śyāma; (5) a conch,— saṅkha; (6) 10 poles; (7) 1000 years; (8) the Veṭasa; (9) Gomeda and Ambikā: with the Digambaras, Sarvāṇa and Kuśmaṇḍinī; (10) Varadatta and Yakshadinnā.

XXIII. Pārśvanātha: (1) Prāṇata-devaloka; (2) Varanasi and Sameta-Śikhara; (3) Asvasena-rāja by Vāmādevi; (4) blue — nila; (5) a serpent — sarpa; (6) 9 hands; (7) 100 years; (8) the Dhātakī or Grislea tomentosa; (9) Pārśvayaksha or Dharaṇendrā and Padmātā; (10) Āryadinna and Pushpachūḍā.

XXIV. Śrī-Mahāvīra, Vardhamāna or Vīra, the Śramaṇa: (1) Prāṇata-devaloka; (2) Kuṇḍagrāma or Chitrakūṭa, and Rijupālukā; (3) Siddhārtharājā, Śrey-ānša or Yaśasvin by Trīśalā Videhadinnā or Priyakārini; (4) yellow; (5) a lion — keśari-simha; (6) 7 hands or cubits; (7) 72 years; (8) the sāla or teak tree; (9) Mātaṅga and Siddhāyikā; (10) Indrabhūti and Chandrabalā.

The Tirthakaras may be regarded as the diī majores of the Jainas⁴, though, having become Siddhas, emancipated from all concern, they can have no interest in mundane affairs. They and such beings as are supposed to have reached perfection are divided into fifteen species:

1. Tirthakarasiddhas;
2. Atirthakarasiddhas;
3. Tirthasiddhas;
4. Svalingasiddhas;
5. Anyaliṅgasiddhas;
6. Striliṅgasiddhas;
7. Purushaliṅgasiddhas;
8. Napuṅsakaliṅgasiddhas;
9. Grihaaliṅgasiddhas;
10. Tirthavyavachchhedasiddhas;
11. Pratyekabuddhasiddhas;
12. Svayambuddhasiddhas;
13. Ekasiddhas;
14. Anekasiddhas;
15. Buddhabodhietasiddhas⁵.

But the gods are divided into four classes, and each class into several orders: the four classes are:

I. Bhavanādhipatis, Bhavanavāsins or Bhaumeyikas, of which there are ten orders, viz. —

1. Asurakumāras;
2. Nāgakumāras;

⁴ For an account of the ritual of the Śvetāmbara sect of Jainas, see my account in the Indian Antiquary, vol. XIII, pp. 191—196.
⁵ Jour. Asiat. IXme Ser. tom. XIX, p. 260.
III. The Jyotishkas are the inhabitants of;
1. Chandras or the moons;
2. Sûryas or the suns;
3. Grahas or the planets;
4. Nakshatras or the constellations;
5. Târâs or the hosts of stars.

And IV. The Vaimânika gods are of two orders:
(1) the Kalpabhavas, who are born in the heavenly Kalp as; and (2) the Kalpatitas, born in the regions above the Kalpas.

(1) The Kalpabhavas again are subdivided into twelve genera who live in the Kalpas after which they are named; viz,—
1. Saudharma; 5. Brahmâlokâ;
2. Îsâna; 6. Lântaka;
3. Sanatkumâra; 7. Śukra or Mahâśukla;
4. Mâhendra; 8. Sahasrâra;
9. Ânata (Ânaya); 11. Âraṇa;

(2) The Kalpâtîtas are subdivided into—(a) the Graiveyakas, living on the upper part of the universe; and (b) the Anuttaras or those above whom there are no others.

(a) The Graiveyakas are of nine species, viz. —
1. Sudarśanas;
2. Supratipandhas;
3. Manoramas;
4. Sarvabhadras;
5. Suvisâlas;
6. Somaṇasas;
7. Sumañkasas;
8. Priyaṅkaras;
9. Âdityas or Nandikaras.

And (b) the Anuttara gods are of five orders: viz. —
1. Vijayas;
2. Vaijayantas;
3. Jayantas;
4. Aparâjitas;
5. Sarvârthasiddhas.

These Anuttara gods inhabit the highest heavens where they live for varying lengths of time as the heavens ascend; and in the fifth or highest — the great Vimâna called Sarvârthasiddha — they all live thirty-three Sâgaropamas or periods of unimaginable duration. Still all the gods are mortal or belong to the saṁsâra.

Above these is the paradise of the Siddhas or perfected souls, and the Uttarâdhyâya Sûtra gives 6 Conf. Ratnasâgara, bh. II, pp. 616, 617; Jour. Asiat. IXme Ser. tome XIX, p. 259; Sac. Bks. E. vol. XI.V, p. 226 f. See also Rev. de l'Histoire des Relig. tom. XLVII, pp. 34—50, which has appeared since the above was written, for “La doctrine des êtres vivants dans la Religion Jâîna”.

74
the following details of this realm of the perfected, or the paradise of the Jainas:

"The perfected souls are those of women, men, hermaphrodites, of orthodox, heterodox, and householders. Perfection is reached by people of the greatest, smallest and middle size; on high places, underground, on the surface of the earth, in the ocean, and in waters (of rivers, etc.).

"Ten hermaphrodites reach perfection at the same time, twenty women, one hundred and eight men; four householders, ten heterodox, and one hundred and eight orthodox monks.

"Two individuals of the greatest size reach perfection (simultaneously), four of the smallest size, and one hundred and eight of the middle size. Four individuals reach perfection (simultaneously) on high places, two in the ocean, three in water, twenty underground; and where do they go on reaching perfection? Perfected souls are debarred from the non-world (Aloka); they reside on the top of the world; they leave their bodies here (below) and go there, on reaching perfection.

"Twelve yojanas above the (Vimâna) Sarvârtha is the place called Iṣhātprāgabhâra, which has the form of an umbrella; (there the perfected souls

---

7 See ante, p. 11, note 10; The following extract is from Sac. Books of the East, vol. XLV, pp. 211—213.
8 The greatest size—ogâhanâ—of men is 500 dhanush or 2000 cubits, the smallest is one cubit.
go). It is forty-five hundred thousand yojanas long, and as many broad, and it is somewhat more than three times as many in circumference. Its thickness is eight yojanas, it is greatest in the middle, and decreases towards the margin, till it is thinner than the wing of a fly. This place, by nature pure, consisting of white gold, resembles in form an open umbrella, as has been said by the best of Jinas.

“(Above it) is a pure blessed place (called Śitâ), which is white like a conch-shell, the anka-stone, and Kunda-flowers; a yojana thence is the end of the world. The perfected souls penetrate the sixth part of the uppermost krośa of the (above-mentioned) yojana. There, at the top of the world reside the blessed perfected souls, rid of all transmigration, and arrived at the excellent state of perfection. The dimension of a perfected soul is two-thirds of the height which the individual had in his last existence.

“The perfected souls considered singly — ēgattēṇa (as individuals) — have a beginning but no end, considered collectively — puhuttēṇa (as a class) — they have neither a beginning nor an end. They have no (visible) form, they consist of hife throughout, they are developed into knowledge and faith, they have crossed the boundary of the Sāṁsāra, and reached the excellent state of perfection.”

Like both the Brāhmaṇa and Buddhists, the Jainas

---

9 The gourd Lagenaria vulgaris.
have a series of hells—Nārakas, numbering seven which they name—

1. Ratnaprabhâ; 5. Dhûmaprabhâ;
2. Šarkarâprabhâ; 6. Tamaprabhâ;
4. Pañkaprabhâ;

Those who inhabit the seventh hell have a stature of 500 poles, and in each above that they are half the height of the one below it.

Everything in the system as to stature of gods and living beings, their ages and periods of transmigration is reduced to artificial numbers.

The Jaina Gachhas.

About the middle of the tenth century there flourished a Jaina high priest named Uddyotana, with whose pupils the eighty four gachhas originated. This number is still spoken of by the Jainas, but the lists that have been hitherto published are very discordant. The following was obtained from a member of the sect as being their recognised list,—and allowing for differences of spelling, nearly every name may be recognised in those previously published by Mr. H. G. Briggs or Colonel Miles.

10 Ratnasâgara, bh. 11, p. 607; Jour. As. u. s. p. 263.
The Eighty four Gachchhas of the Jainas.¹

1. Vaḍa *†
2. Osvāla *†
3. Āñchala *
4. Jirāvalā *†
5. Khaḍatara or Kharatara
6. Lonkā or Richmati *†
7. Tapā *†
8. Gaṅgeśvara *†
9. Korāṅtavāla *
10. Ānandapura *
11. Bharavalī
12. Udhaṇiyā *†
13. Gudāvā *†
14. Dekāūpā or Dekāwā *†
15. Bhinmālā *
16. Mahuḍiyā *†
17. Gachhapāla *†
18. Goshavāla *
19. Magatragagadā *
20. Vrihmaniya *
21. Tālārā *†
22. Vikādiya *†
23. Muṅjhiya *†
24. Chitroḍā *
25. Sāchorā *†
26. Jachandiyā *
27. Sīdhālavā *†
28. Miṅṇiyā da 29. Agamiya *
30. Maladhāri *†
31. Bhāvariya *
32. Palivāla *†
33. Nāgadīgeśvara *
34. Dharmaghosha *
35. Nāgapurā *†
36. Uchatavāla *
37. Nāṇṇāvāla *
38. Sāgera *
39. Manḍovara *
40. Śurāṇi *
41. Khambhavatī *
42. Pāṇḍhanda
43. Sopāriya *
44. Manḍaliya *
45. Kochhipanā *
46. Jāgaṁnā *
47. Lāparavāla *
48. Vosaraḍā *
49. Dūṇvaṅdaniya *
50. Chitravāla *
51. Vegadā
52. Vapada

¹ Those names marked * are found in Col. Miles’s list Tr. R. A. S. vol. III, pp. 358 f. 363, 365, 370. Those marked † are included in H. G. Brigg’s list, — Cities of Gujarashtra, p. 339.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No.</th>
<th>City Name</th>
<th>Status</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>53</td>
<td>Vījaharā, Vījharā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>54</td>
<td>Kāüpūrī †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>55</td>
<td>Kāchala</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>56</td>
<td>Hamdaliyā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>57</td>
<td>Mahukarā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>58</td>
<td>Putaliyā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>59</td>
<td>Kaṁnariseyā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>60</td>
<td>Revarḍiyā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>61</td>
<td>Dhandhukā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>62</td>
<td>Thambhanīpaṇā*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>63</td>
<td>Pāmchivāla †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>64</td>
<td>Pālaṇpurā*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65</td>
<td>Gaṁdhārīyā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>66</td>
<td>Veliyā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>67</td>
<td>Sādhapunāmiyā</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>68</td>
<td>Nagarakoṭiyā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>69</td>
<td>Hāsorā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>70</td>
<td>Bhaṭanerā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>71</td>
<td>Jaṇaharā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>72</td>
<td>Jagāyana*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>73</td>
<td>Bhīmasena*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>74</td>
<td>Takaḍiyā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>75</td>
<td>Kaṁboja*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>76</td>
<td>Senatā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>77</td>
<td>Vagherā*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>78</td>
<td>Vaheḍiyā*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>79</td>
<td>Siddhapura*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80</td>
<td>Ghoghari*†</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>81</td>
<td>Nīgamiyā</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>82</td>
<td>Punamiyā</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>83</td>
<td>Varhaḍiyā †</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>84</td>
<td>Nāmīlā. †</td>
<td></td>
</tr> </tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS.

The Indian Sect of the Jainas, by Dr. J. G. Bühler. p. 1.
Appendix: — Epigraphic testimony to the continuity of the Jaina tradition . . . . . . . . ." 48.
Sketch of Jaina Mythology, by J. Burgess . . ,, 61.
Bühler, Georg
On the Indian sect of the Jainas